Solons cross party lines to OK GMA-backed bill repealing capital punishment

Bunye irked, says bye to 'Hello Garci'

and Michael Lim Ubac

EXACTLY A YEAR AFTER HIS "I have two CDs" announcement, Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye was riled by reporters' continued questions on the "Hello Garci" scandal that shook Malacañang and provoked the worst political crisis in President Macapagal-Arroyo's administration.

"We are not talking about that anymore," Bunye said yesterday at a briefing when the issue involving Ms Arroyo's wiretapped conversations with then Election Commissioner Virgilio Garcillano was raised.

"As far as we're concerned, it's a dead issue. And since this is related to the impeachment, we know that the people are tired of too much politics ... that the people would rather move forward," he said.

Bunye was visibly angered when reporters pressed him for more comments on the controversy alleging fraud in the 2004 presidential election.

IN A MOVE THAT WOULD BENEFIT about 1,000 people on death row, the Senate and the House of Representatives yesterday crossed party lines to approve the abolition of the death penalty, weeks before President Macapagal-Arroyo's visit to the Vatican for an audience with Pope Benedict XVI.

Saying that capital punishment was cruel, antipoor and had failed to deter heinous crimes, the Senate approved on third and final reading—by a 16-0 vote with one abstention—Senate Bill No. 2254 scrapping the death penalty.

Also crossing party lines, members of the House passed their own version by a similarly crushing vote, 119 for abolition, 20 against and one abstention.

The two chambers are expected to hammer out a common version which Ms Arroyo, who has publicly said she favors the abolition of capital punishment, is expected to sign into law.

The twin congressional action would repeal Republic Act No. 7659 or the Death Penalty Law, which Congress reimposed in 1993. It would also scrap Republic Act No. 8177, which prescribes death by lethal injection for those convicted of heinous crimes.

Instead of death, the penalty is downgraded to reclusion perpetua or life imprisonment without parole, under the Senate version.

Private sector brightest spot in bleak school system

By Volt Contreras

(Last of a series)

POLITICIANS AND BUREAUCRATS COME and go with speeches and sound bites on everything that's wrong with the Philippine education system but businessmen are proving to be the reformists.

Private sector assistance, now worth billions of pesos each year, is one of the rare bright spots in the ailing public school system.

What individual projects may lack in scale, corporate donors make up for in terms of strategic targeting, reliable funding, technology and, more importantly, continuity, or the assurance that new books, computers and classrooms are forthcoming no matter who won in the last elections.

At the House, Senior Deputy Minority Leader Alan Peter Cayetano wondered in a privilege speech why, a year after the wiretapping scandal and two years after the 2004 presidential polls, there had been "no credible, fair, independent investigation on election fraud."

"Everyone knows that there was cheating, everyone accepts that there was cheating, everyone agrees that we should investigate it. But not a single department or agency or government entity has investigated election fraud," Cayetano said.

Deadlock brings gov't closer to recycled budget

THE GOVERNMENT INCHED CLOSER TO having a reenacted budget for the rest of the year after Congress' second bicameral conference on the proposed national budget of P1.053 trillion for 2006 ended in a deadlock Monday night.

Without any breakthrough before Congress adjourns on Friday, the prospect of reenacting the P907.56-billion budget for 2005 is "strong," administration Sen. Joker Arroyo said yesterday.

"That means the President will be operating on the budget of last year, as in fact she has been operating already for the first half of 2006," he said at a briefing.

TOKYO—MORE AND MORE FILIPINOS ARE being drawn to universities in Asia's wealthiest country, but unlike those who pursue higher studies elsewhere, they tend to be more eager to return home and contribute to the brain gain.

Each year, 95 to 100 Filipino scholars are chosen by the Japanese government for research, graduate and postgraduate programs. Mostly in their 20s and 30s, they are provided more generous scholarship grants with less stringent conditions.

Those who intend to pursue MAs or Ph Ds usually apply for a research grant first, and easily get more funding if accepted by the universities for further studies.

House OKs bill paying Marcos victims

By Philip C. Tubeza

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES PASSED ON second reading yesterday a bill allocating P8 billion in ill-gotten wealth recovered from the Marcoses as compensation for victims of human rights abuses under the martial law regime of deposed dictator Ferdinand Marcos, and one of its proponents described it significant in light of the current wave of suspected extrajudicial executions.

House Bill No. 3315 was expected to clear third reading late last night or tonight.

"This is very significant. It makes the state realize that it is responsible and accountable with respect to human rights violations," said Akbayan party-list Rep. Loretta Ann Rosales.

House Bill No. 3315 was expected to clear third reading late last night or tonight.

"In a situation such as now, when there are so many extrajudicial killings, and you have torture reported, like the Erap 5, and the desaparecidos, this is very, very important," she added.

The bill is expected to benefit

9,539 documented human rights victims of martial law.

Rosales said that Sen. Joker Arroyo had assured her that the Senate was ready to pass its own version once the House bill was approved.

"It's as good as passed," Rosales said. "It would be easy to approve it on third reading because this is certified as urgent. I believed (Majority Leader Prospero) Nograles when he was telling me, 'Etta, when I say it's going to be passed, it's going to be passed.' They all sounded determined, even Speaker Jose de Venecia."

Rosales said that President Macapagal-Arroyo told her that she wanted the bill enacted into law as early as November 2004.

Rosales said that the bill's proponents would try to insist in the bicameral conference committee that the victims get P10 billion instead of P8 billion.

The bill originally mandated that $200 million (around P10.5 billion) of the $683 million in Marcos funds recovered from Swiss banks be given to the victims.

However, the House leadership insisted that the compensation should be set in pesos and the total amount fixed at P8 billion.

"The P8 billion is already a big amount but what we will do is try to haggle this in the (bicameral conference committee) to bring it back to P10 billion, because what we talked about was $200 million. Joker Arroyo is very strong on $200 million," Rosales said.

The proposed law would set up a compensation board that would determine how much each victim should receive, and this would depend on the gravity of the abuse suffered.

Rosales said claimants who won a $2 billion class suit against the Marcoses in Hawaii in 1995 would be given priority in the award of compensation but "without prejudice to other victims."

The bill limits "compensable victims" to those who suffered human rights violations from 1972 up to 1986 only.

For victims who died, their spouse or "direct descendants and ascendants, in that order," would be entitled to receive compensation.

The bill states that "any compensation received under this Act shall be without prejudice to the receipt of any other sum by the victim from the estate of Ferdinand Marcos or any person, other than the Republic, in any case involving any human rights violation as defined by this act."

The compensation board would be composed of a retired Supreme Court justice as chair and four members—two representatives from a human rights nongovernmental organization, the secretary of justice, and the chair of the Commission on Human Rights.

The NGO representatives should not be beneficiaries. They should not be claimants or a member of any organization claiming compensation," Rosales said.

No one will accept FPJ award

IT APPEARS THAT FOR NOW NO one will be going to Malacañang on Friday to accept the National Artist Award for the late movie idol Fernando Poe Jr.

Nestor Jardin, president of the Cultural Center of the Philippines (not Hardin and not the National Commission on Culture and the Arts as reported earlier) said yesterday that film director Eddie Romero, himself a National Artist Awardee, had told the NCCA that he would not be accepting the award on behalf of the Poe family.

Romero was earlier designated by Poe's widow, actress Susan Roces, to be the family's representative at the awarding rites. But it seems this was no longer the case.

"He [Romero] was no longer requested by the Poe family to receive the award," Jardin said in a phone interview.

"No representative for the family will be there to accept the award," he said.

Jardin said he was "disappointed" by the development, noting that when the NCCA and CCP recommended Poe for the award, there were "no political considerations" involved.

"I fervently hope [the family] will reconsider the decision because after all FPJ was selected by his peers in the artistic community," he said.

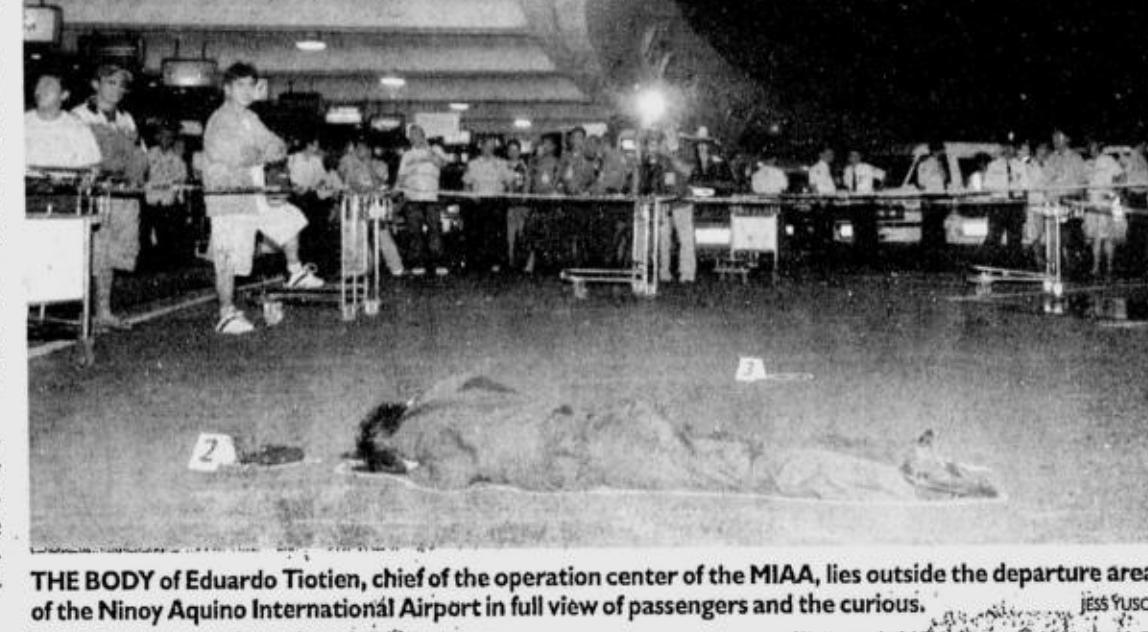

President Macapagal-Arroyo is set to confer the award on Poe and five other distinguished Filipino artists on Friday in ceremonies in Malacañang.

When Roces was invited by officials to accept the posthumous award for her husband on May 25, she informed them that she had requested Romero, a close friend of Poe's, to accept the award for the family.

Roces has joined opposition calls for Ms Arroyo to resign, accusing her of stealing the 2004 election from her husband.

Poe ran as the opposition presidential candidate in the May 2004 elections but lost to Ms Arroyo by about a million votes. He died of a massive stroke in December 2004. Christine Avenaño

Cops claim solution near in Sanchez bombing

By Nikko Dizon

CAMP VICENTE LIM, LAGUNA—Police investigating last week's bomb attack on Batangas Gov. Armando Sanchez said yesterday that they were close to solving the botched assassination attempt.

A close associate of Sanchez, meanwhile, said he received reports that the brains of the slay had offered P100 million to have the governor killed.

Senior Supt. Ricardo Padilla, head of the special team investigating the incident, said they were close to uncovering the mastermind and the suspects who planted the bomb that killed two of Sanchez's aides.

He, however, declined to name the suspects and the motive behind the attack.

Members of the special investigating team composed of bomb experts, crime scene investigators and the local police met yesterday for the first time in a case conference held at the office of Padilla in this camp.

Padilla, who is also the deputy regional director for operations of the Calabarzon police, said they would be holding weekly meetings to resolve the case quickly.

Police investigators said yesterday the bomb which ripped through Sanchez's vehicle had been planted under the driver's seat.

Supt. Ligaya Cabal, chief of the Scene of the Crime Operatives (Soco) of the Calabarzon police, said the bomb, identified as a TNT explosive, had been tied to the underchassis of Sanchez's Hummer H2 SUV, directly under the driver's seat.

"That would explain why most of the debris and damage were on the left side of the vehicle," Cabal said.

A missing 6-inch piece of the vehicle's step board served to reinforce their findings. "That part should have been there if it was not blown away," she said.

The bodies, she said, bore no piercing from the debris. Both driver and bodyguard were already dead before the second explosion, she added. Marlon Ramos, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

AN AIRPORT OFFICIAL WAS ALLEGEDLY GUNNED DOWN BY AN AVIATION POLICE MAJOR LATE MONDAY NIGHT AT THE NINIOY AQUINO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT (NAIA).

The violent death of Eduardo Tiotioen, an airport action officer, highlighted the struggle to curb unlawful activities at the airport, particularly the illegal facilitation of passengers' arrivals and departures.

"This is painful to me. Ed believed in what we are doing. This is what you get for doing what's right," Alfonso Cusi, airport chief, told the INQUIRER.

A crestfallen Cusi sat in a corner at the Naia 1 departure curbside, away from the crowd and investigators that had gathered around his friend who lay lifeless on the ground.

Tiotioen, who was in his mid-40s, was shot at close range at around 11:40 p.m. in front of horrified security guards, airport employees and a handful of late night flight passengers.

Cusi acknowledged that Tio-tioen was a trusted staffer he had brought along from the Philippine Ports Authority (PPA) following his appointment by President Macapagal-Arroyo as general manager of the Manila International Airport Authority (Miaa) in 2004.

As police examined the crime scene, the suspected gunman, Chief Insp. Conon Tenorio, surrendered to his superiors at the Aviation Security Group (ASG), the Philippine National Police (PNP) unit tasked to protect the airport complex.

"He (Tenorio) called me up and said, 'I'm very sorry, sir. Nang-yari ito. Nahiyahi ako, pero nang-yari (it happened). I am ashamed but it happened,'" said Senior Supt. Pablo Francisco Balagtas, commander of the 1st Police Center for Aviation Security (PCAS).

In a phone interview, Balagtas said that as head of operations, Tenorio was fourth in command at the 1st PCAS, which has jurisdiction over Naia 1 and the Centennial Terminal.

Cusi had requested the National Bureau of Investigation to look into the killing, instead of the ASG, to ensure an impartial investigation.

Initial investigation showed that shortly before the incident, Tiotioen saw Tenorio assisting an unidentified passenger at the Naia 1 arrival area.

The action officer suspected an illegal facilitation, purportedly called Tenorio's attention, and radioed the CCTV unit, which he heads, to focus the camera on the police officer.

Later, Tenorio allegedly waited for Tiotioen, who was ending his shift and would have proceeded to his vehicle parked at the departure curbside.

NBI investigator Angelito Magno said that based on witnesses' accounts, Tenorio grabbed Tiotioen and tried to force him into a vehicle.

A commotion ensued, followed by three gunshots.

Tiotioen fell to the ground and Tenorio fled with his pistol.

The ASG had turned over Tenorio and his firearm to Magno early yesterday morning.

The suspect would be facing murder charges.

Palace, traders rebuked on wages

By Philip C. Tubeza and Jerome Aning

HOUSE MAJORITY LEADER Prospero Nograles yesterday rebuked Palace officials and business leaders who raised a howl over the proposed P125 legislative wage hike after earlier snubbing congressional hearings.

"It passed the House. They should have objected during the labor committee hearings which they snubbed," Nograles said. "They all didn't attend, including the employers groups," he added.

Nograles said Palace officials and employers should have voiced their opposition to House Bill 345 during the hearings of the House labor committee and not after the bill was passed on second reading.

Nograles made the comment after businessmen and National Economic Development Authority chair Romulo Neri warned of massive layoffs if the bill was signed into law.

The bill had already been watered down with the P125 across-the-board wage hike to be implemented in three tranches: P45 in October this year, P40 in 2007 and P40 in 2008.

However, Neri said that a P45 wage hike would displace between 288,000 and 620,000 workers. He added that between 225,000 and 424,000 more could be laid off in 2007, and between 210,000 and 365,000 in 2008.

But Zamboanga del Norte Rep. Roseller Barinaga, House labor committee chair, downplayed Neri's warning, saying layoffs would still happen even if the bill were scrapped.

"Whether or not the bill is passed, there would still be layoffs. There are other factors at play here. It's not just the wage hike bill," Barinaga said.

Barinaga said he hoped the House would pass the bill on third reading.

He said that if the Palace and employers' groups had complaints about the bill, they could follow it up in the Senate or the bicameral conference committee.

The militant Kilusang Mayo Uno also scoffed at Neri's dire prediction.

"Neri is obviously toeing the line of Malacañang and business groups, which is to predict a doomsday scenario against the granting of just wages for workers," said KMU secretary general Joel Maglunsod.

Maglunsod said that even with the absence of wage hikes, the inflation rate would still rise and unemployment worsen due to deep-seated problems the domestic economy, particularly contractualization and other flexible labor practices.

RP dropped from US list of traffickers

By Volt Contreras

THE PHILIPPINES HAS MADE IT out of Washington's human trafficking watch list owing to a series of court victories and a larger deployment of prosecutors against what the US government regards as modern-day slavery—forced prostitution, sex trafficking and child labor—the US Embassy said yesterday.

The US Department of State's 2006 Trafficking in Persons report, released on Monday, said the Philippines had been taken out of its watch list of problem nations and moved up to a category of countries that had made substantial progress in combating human trafficking.

The report congratulated the Philippine government for improvements made during the year, noting it had "stepped up efforts to implement its antitrafficking law and made initial progress in implementing strategies to combat (trafficking in persons), particularly in prosecuting human traffickers."

The report, however, maintained that the country had yet to "fully comply with the minimum standards and remains a source, transit, and destination country for men, women and children trafficked for purposes of human exploitation and forced labor."

According to the embassy, "Tier 1" countries are those that fully comply with minimum international standards while those in "Tier 2"—including the Philippines—do not fully comply but are making significant efforts to combat the problem.

Down a rank is the "Tier 2 Watch List," which lists countries that have made efforts to combat trafficking but still have a significant number of victims and, until this year, had included the Philippines.

"Tier 3" countries are the worst offenders and could face restrictions on US government assistance.

The Philippines shares the Tier 2 bracket with 78 other countries.

The report said the Philippines had made "discernible progress" against human trafficking, particularly in law enforcement, noting that the Department of Justice had tripled the number of prosecutors handling trafficking cases at the national level and assigned additional personnel in the provinces. With a report from AP

Security body sets 1st meet

THE NEWLY CREATED Filipino-American Security Engagement Board is to meet for the first time in Hawaii this weekend to map out new joint exercises on counterterrorism and other "nontraditional" security threats.

Defense Secretary Avelino Cruz Jr said the meeting in Honolulu of top Philippine and US military and defense officials will coincide with the regular meeting of the two countries' Mutual Defense Board which will tackle cooperation in the event of external attacks.

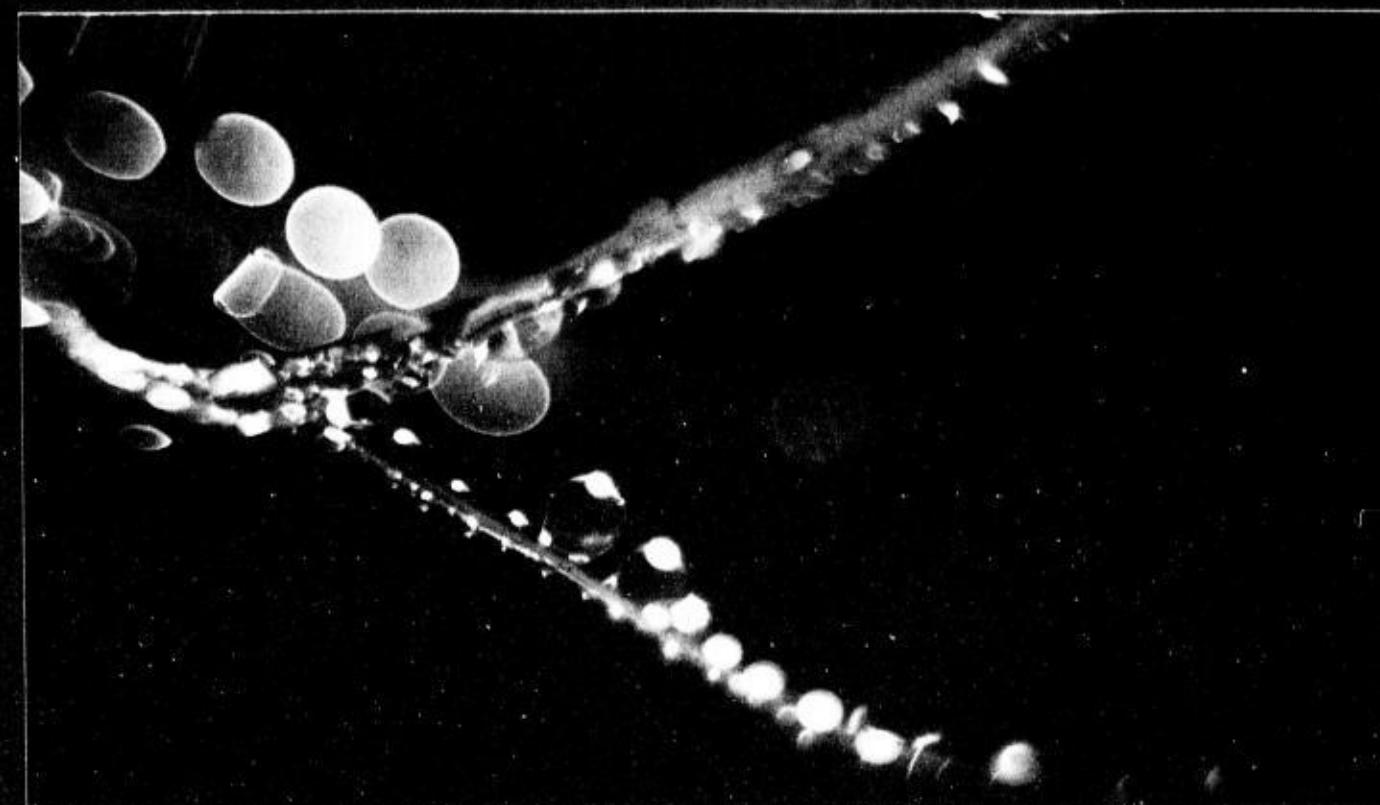

APP chief of staff Gen. Generoso Senga, who co-chairs both bodies, will lead the Philippine delegation, which officials said is scheduled to leave for Honolulu on Thursday or Friday. Senga's co-chair is Admiral William Fallon, head of the US military's Pacific Command who was in Joao, Sul, last Monday.

"In the first hour, they will discuss preparations for external armed attack. [In the] second hour, they will discuss how to address nontraditional concerns," Cruz said.

Private sector brightest spot in bleak school system bought at P8.50 each, said FPCCI president Francis Chua.

"On the average, we have donated one school building a day," Chua said of his group's Operation: Barrio School, which on any given class day benefits some 640,000 students.

A challenge

"But it's quite sad that the more schools we build, the more shortages seem to occur because of population growth," he said. "It's a challenge we just have to live with."

Ayala Foundation Inc. has chosen the high-tech route. It heads a consortium that, in the next five years, hopes to connect all 5,500 public high schools nationwide to the Internet.

This P1.5-billion project is dubbed "Gilos," a Filipino term for talent or wondrous ability, and also stands for Gearing Up Internet Literacy and Access for Students.

Gilos now covers 780 schools, mostly in Mindanao, since it was launched two years ago.

At a cost of about P300,000 per school, setting up "virtual libraries" composed of 10 PCs each seemed more cost-effective and could offer a practically limitless source of information than traditional brick-and-mortar libraries.

Media Master

The device, called Media Master, can then play back the material—say, an English primer on volcanoes, oceans, wild animals—to supplement the day's lectures. Around 200 elementary schools now enjoy this satellite feed since Text2Teach was launched in May 2003, with 300 to 400 more schools targeted in the next few years.

Only as good as teachers

"But these tools can only be as good as the teachers themselves," conceded Mario Derequito, director of AFI's Center for Social Development.

Hence, other private sector initiatives focusing on the teachers, like the Foundation for the Upgrading of Education (FUSE), established 12 years ago by Sen. Edgardo Angara, former Agriculture Secretary Salvador Escudero and businessman Lucio Tan.

FUSE already saw the potential of video as teaching aid way back in the days of the VHS tape. It produced a set of instructional tapes known as Constel (Continuing Studies Through Education).

The tapes have since been viewed by around 10,000 public school teachers who, under a parallel FUSE program, have undergone training, according to Escudero, the FUSE president.

Some P150 million has gone to the production of the tapes as well as the training program courses, which in the last two years have also expanded into a scholarship for teachers recommended by the Department of Education for master's degrees in Ateneo de Manila University or De La Salle University.

There are currently 73 such scholars, for whom the foundation has allotted P15 million.

Mentoring the mentors

"Mentoring the Mentors" is also the centerpiece project of a much younger group, the Foundation for Worldwide People Power, whose prime movers include INQUIRER founding chair Eugenia D. Apostol.

"Mentors" training modules seek to not only upgrade teachers' classroom skills but boost their morale, according to FWPP executive director Butch Hernandez.

"Teachers are guided into forming cohesive faculties that can manage their time and keep themselves properly motivated to cope with big classroom sizes and lack of resources," Hernandez said.

"Our approach is not only skills-building but also inspirational. (The teachers) begin to look beyond personal and other material inadequacies. They begin to have stronger empathy for their pupils. This is no longer just about me but about them," he added.

The program basically involves gathering teachers from a particular school for four to five days in workshops on team-building, how to prepare better lesson plans, how to become better motivators, etc. They will be monitored for a year after the training.

"It's easy to blame teachers for what's happening, but we're all in this together," said Hernandez as he referred to another FWPP scheme, Local Mobilization Strategy (LMS).

LMS is a prescribed process in community organizing that enables parents, donors and institutions to enter into a closer relationship with a school and make sure "any physical improvement on the campus will actually translate into higher grades for the children."

Hernandez said there had been countless examples of schools receiving or soliciting certain donations—a new computer, new roofing, a fresh coat of paint—without any real "incentive" relating to student performance.

Performance

The LMS is a mechanism for the community and the school to enter into a sort of agreement and set "achievable goals," like a 10-percent increase in test scores come the final exams.

"We shift the discussion from mere 'welfare' mentality to performance," Hernandez said.

The League of Corporate Foundations (LCF), in its annual report for 2005, said 90 percent of its 70-plus member companies were engaged in one form or another in the pursuit of quality education.

The report cited a survey of 35 LCF members plus those belonging to the FPCCI and the Philippine Business for Social Progress showing they were all involved in 257 such projects with total funding of P1.5 billion last year alone.

Too important to leave to state

These projects have benefited 3.1 million public school pupils; 34,624 schools; 14,370 teachers, and 7,000 other individuals in related sectors.

Addressing an LCF function in July last year, then Education Undersecretary Mike Luz exhorted the business sector to "go beyond" material donations and aspire for expertise-sharing and capability-building.

Luz, who eight months later would resign because of a tiff with Malacañang, gave his own spin to a familiar saying and conceded: "Education is too important to leave to the government alone."

TEACHERS REMEMBER HOW the Diosdado Macapagal Elementary School in Tatalon, Quezon City, looked five years ago.

The paint on the walls was peeling off, the roofs of the classrooms were leaking, and a poor drainage system was bringing murky water into the classrooms, submerging them when the rains came.

But since the Department of Education started its National Schools Maintenance Week dubbed "Brigada Eskwela" in 2003, there has been much improvement in the school, according to assistant principal Dr. Evelyn de Leon.

Tatalon is mostly a depressed area composed of poor to lower-middle class families. But entering the Diosdado Macapagal Elementary School is like being transported to another world.

The walls gleam with a fresh coat of paint. The roofs of the buildings have been repaired and the classrooms have been cleaned. Now, a bathroom can be found in nearly all of the 64 rooms.

A concrete pathway and an improved drainage system have kept floodwaters from entering the classrooms.

"Parents usually didn't send their children to school on the first day of classes because the students would be doing the cleaning," De Leon told the INQUIRER.

"They would go home all dirtied up," she said. "But now with Brigada Eskwela, the students went straight to their lessons because they didn't have to clean up first."

Brigada Eskwela was conceived partly to address the deteriorating physical state of public schools around the country.

DepEd officials said Brigada Eskwela was also a way to attract greater participation of the community, through volunteerism.

DepEd officer in charge Pe Hidalgo explained that the program was a nationwide voluntary effort of teachers, parents, students, members of the community, local governments and other organizations to do minor repairs in their schools in preparation for the start of the school year.

Brigada Eskwela (Bayanihan Para Sa Paaralan) encourages volunteers to donate materials such as paint, cement, lumber and other materials, which could be used for minor repairs.

Volunteers are also enjoined to contribute man-hours in the repair of the schools. The principals are in charge of marshalling the materials and soliciting the volunteer "man-hours" for the activity.

Hidalgo said the DepEd started the project to offset gaps in the education budget. She estimated that the department could save around P2 billion in school maintenance and operating expenses (MOE) a year as a result of the Brigada Eskwela.

Last year's Brigada Eskwela involved 26,034 public schools (or 61 percent of all public schools nationwide). A total of 2,008,628 volunteer man-days (worth P572.49 million) was generated and P455.43 million worth of donations in-kind were gathered.

This year, Hidalgo said a total of 42,221 public elementary and high schools, or 70 percent of public schools around the country, participated in the project, up 9 percent from last year.

There are 37,000 public elementary schools and 4,769 public high schools in the country.

Because of the program, the money saved by the schools from their MOE rose to P2 billion this year from P1 billion last year, according to Hidalgo.

"Brigada Eskwela is bayanihan in action. Here we see the spirit of volunteerism very much alive among our school communities. This is an important value we should teach each and every Filipino child," she said.

Cha-cha protest slated for Independence Day

A MILITANT CATHOLIC archbishop said yesterday an interfaith and multisectoral coalition would take to the streets next week to denounce efforts by the Arroyo administration to amend the Constitution, while Manila Mayor Lito Atienza said he and other suburban mayors planned a series of public forums throughout the metropolis in support of Charter change.

Archbishop Oscar Cruz of Lingayen and Dagupan said that the coalition had gotten the commitment of Archbishop Angel Lagdameo, president of the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines, and other prelates to attend the rally, which will coincide with the celebration of Independence Day on Monday.

"The rally is specifically to express that we are against Charter change," Cruz said. "Hopefully it will be a very objective rally without rancor or anger and just a manifestation of sentiments of some people against the proposed Cha-cha."

Meanwhile, President Macapagal-Arroyo said in an interview over dzMM radio that she did not know how the Charter change effort would go because it "has a life of its own."

Noli seeks China trade

VICE PRESIDENT Noli de Castro yesterday asked China's top government officials to encourage Chinese businessmen to invest in the Philippines, particularly in housing and mining.

De Castro, who is in China for an official visit, met separately with Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao and Vice President Zeng Qinghong for bilateral talks.

In their meetings, De Castro told the Chinese leaders that while there had been advances in trade between the two countries, Chinese investments in the Philippines had remained minuscule.

De Castro noted that Chinese investments in the country in the first three quarters of 2005 amounted only to P82.3 million, accounting for a measly 0.14 percent of total foreign investments for the period.

"We would appreciate the assistance of the Chinese government in promoting investment opportunities in the Philippines among your investors, particularly in infrastructure development, agriculture and fisheries, housing and mining," he said.

De Castro said the Philippines welcomed Chinese investments in housing to help the government cope with the massive housing shortage. Cynthia D. Balana not in my hands, but what I can say is that I will remain President until 2010 and not one day later."

Cruz told reporters that the protest would be "more of a prayer rally," so organizers would not allow participants to carry banners, flags, streamers or placards.

Cruz added that groups from various political affiliations, faiths and sectors would be gathering for the protest.

"Hopefully, it will not have ideological content because it is just a rally against Cha-cha," he added.

"If the government is rallying people for Cha-cha I see no reason why we cannot rally against Cha-cha."

Cruz said he hoped the government would not look at the rally as a destabilization move just because it contradicts the Arroyo administration's policy.

He added that he and bishops were not exactly among the organizers of the rally but were only invited to attend it.

Thyroid Function Tests (FT3, FT4, T3, T4, TSH)

What is it? The thyroid is a small gland with left and right lobes that look like a butterfly's wings. Small as it is, the thyroid has an enormously important job to do. Thyroid function affects your metabolism, energy level, heart rate, weight control, and more. A routine evaluation of your thyroid hormone levels includes T3, T4, and TSH. These tests are used mainly to diagnose hyperthyroidism (overactive thyroid) and hypothyroidism (underactive thyroid). They may also be used to help evaluate a patient with an enlarged thyroid gland, called a goiter. Diagnosis of thyroid disease is based on symptoms and physical examination. Most thyroid problems can be managed well if properly diagnosed and treated. For more information, consult your doctor.

the Senate investigation," he added. Cayetano said the five House committees that looked into the matter focused on wiretapping and political destabilization but "skirted" the issue of election fraud.

"Is it an accident that the first anniversary of the Gloria-Garci tapes falls on the day June 6, 2006, or more popularly known as 666—a date associated with an omen or with evil?" he said.

Answering his own question, he said it was not an accident because "the evils of corruption are born out of election fraud."

"We hope this is the last anniversary of the Garci tapes," Cayetano said.

He said the scandal should have appropriate closure.

"If not, the 2007 elections will be the next victim of electoral fraud," he warned, adding that "those who do not study the lessons of history are bound to repeat it."

Garci, Gary

At his press conference last year, Bunye claimed that the two "Hello Garci" CDs were delivered anonymously to his house in Ayala-Alabang.

He said that the CD supposedly being floated by the opposition was a spliced copy, and that in the original copy, the person Ms Arroyo was speaking with on the phone was not Garcillano but Edgardo "Gary" Ruado, an aide of her brother-in-law, Rep. Ignacio Arroyo.

Bunye subsequently submitted the two CDs to the National Bureau of Investigation. He was also summoned to Congress to explain how he got hold of the CDs.

"We have explained this quite exhaustively," the press secretary told reporters yesterday. "We were subjected to interpellation for one day and a half, so I think further discussions would not serve any useful purpose."

He also said there was nothing to regret about the "Hello Garci" press conference.

Bunye said the decision to expose the two CDs was made on the "spur of the moment" because the opposition had leaked a copy to a radio station that same morning.

Half-full, half-empty

At the Newsmakers Forum last week, Bunye said he had never lied to the media.

"I never stretch the truth. I might have highlighted, or I might have marshaled, the presentation. For example, I always prefer to look at a half-full glass rather than a half-empty glass," he said.

Like Ms Arroyo, Bunye appeared to have emerged stronger from last year's political crisis.

He has since become the government's media czar, with the resignation of then Communications Director Silvestre Afable and the centralization of the multibillion-peso adversing budgets of all state agencies and corporations under his office.

Asked yesterday if he felt that Ms Arroyo had rewarded him enough for his loyalty and if he felt that he was a more powerful press secretary now than 12 months ago, Bunye was touchy.

"You've asked that question in private and I have answered you. I don't know the reason for the question, unless you want to show that you are really makulit (pushy)," he said.

He added: "We have a professional relationship, and I believe one of the reasons I have stayed long and served in this capacity is because I believe in her program, I believe in the vision of the President.

"I don't have to read her mind because most of the policies of the President are in the MTPDP (Medium Term Philippine Development Program), and this is what I consider my bible. And I believe all Cabinet members should read this very thoroughly."

Asked what Ms Arroyo had learned from the scandal, Bunye said: "I think the lesson there is, just focus on your job and I think things will turn out OK. The President has not been distracted. She has performed according to her plans, and the proof of that is the very respectable growth of our economy."

'Never again'

In his speech, Cayetano expressed hope that the people and their leaders had learned their own lessons.

"[Let us] remind ourselves that this should never again happen to our country," he said. "Let us ask ourselves today, 'Have we as a nation learned from our lesson from the Garci-Gloria tape?'

According to Cayetano, the lesson learned so far by the people was that wiretapping is illegal. "We also learned not to be caught talking about cheating, unless you want your voice as a 'Hello Garci' ring tone," he said.

"Seriously, the main issue is election fraud—the mother of all corruption in our country," Cayetano said, pointing out that for every P1 collected by the government, 40 centavos went to corruption.

Thus, he said, hunger and unemployment, peace and order, health care and education were issues directly affected by election fraud.

Addressing Ms Arroyo, Cayetano said: "After the holdup and cover-up, Madam President, your time is up."

He called for closure through a "quick, independent investigation," and for the Commission on Elections to contribute to the search for the truth behind the "Hello Garci" scandal.

Stronger in enchanted kingdom'

Senate President Franklin Drilon, Senate Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. and Sen. Rodolfo Biazon—all critics of Ms Arroyo—said the scandal was far from over.

"There is talk about [another] impeachment in the House. I'm sure it would include the Garci tapes," said Drilon who, along with the Liberal Party that he heads, withdrew support from Ms Arroyo and called for her resignation at the peak of the crisis last year.

"There are fundamental things to be resolved, questions to be answered, and the answers to these questions are being barred from being known by the public because of the continued insistence on invoking [Executive Order] 464," Biazon said.

Commenting on Bunye's earlier statement that Ms Arroyo had emerged stronger from the crisis, Pimentel said: "Yes, she's stronger in the enchanted kingdom, but not in the real world [where] she is weakening by the day."

"[She] is weakening the longer she stays in office under very questionable circumstances. She has nowhere to go but down."

But Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile agreed with Malacañang's stance: "She has weathered the storm so far, so I think she is already out of it."

ate-degree holders than other First World countries.

"I prefer Japan because I've been here before and it's closer to the Philippines. I get homesick easily," said Marie Danielle Guillen, a Ph D candidate at the University of Tsukuba's Graduate School of Systems and Information Engineering.

"If I had chosen the United States, the chance that I'd go back and work in the Philippines might be lower. Most of my friends [who studied] in the US never returned," she said.

Guillen, 32, is into policy and planning sciences—a field that trains students in the application of appropriate techniques for dealing with various social phenomena and/or policymaking.

"I do plan to work in the Philippines and hopefully apply what I've learned from my graduate studies. Five years from now, hopefully I'll be back," she said.

Community of scholars

Jane Romero, 32, also hopes to return home in five years despite the fact that her scholarship grant does not require her to render public service in the Philippines.

Romero is scheduled to complete her Ph D in civil engineering at Tokohu University's Regional and Urban Planning Laboratory in September.

"I resigned from my previous job before coming here, so it will be back to square one for me. If I'm not needed [in the Philippines], I'd have to check options of working [elsewhere]. But I hope that after five years, I'll be back in Manila with not just a paper Ph D but also valuable work experience to share," she said.

At first, Romero was not sure of pursuing further studies. But when she attended a conference in Chiba in October 2002, she was inspired by friends who had moved on to graduate studies.

"They seemed happy and encouraging, so in April 2003 I joined them, although we were scattered in different universities and in different parts of Japan," she recalled.

Guillen and Romero are both recipients of the Mombukagakusho scholarship, which provides plane tickets from the home country and back, a settling allowance upon arrival, a monthly stipend and, upon request, additional research funding.

The INQUIRER stumbled on the burgeoning community of Filipino scholars in Japan while covering the World Bank's Annual Bank Conference on Development Economics (ABCDE), which was held for the first time in Asia last week.

There were two Filipino participants at the ABCDE—Gregoria Evangelio and Charmelle Recoter, both graduate students in their 30s and both planning to return to the Philippines and to their employer, the Department of Finance, to apply what they had learned.

Evangelio is taking a master's program in public policy and taxation at Yokohama National University; Recoter is in the graduate school of business and commerce at Keio University.

Statistics

More than 2,500 Filipinos have studied in Japan since its government initiated a scholarship program for foreign students 50 years ago, according to the Japan Information and Cultural Center in Manila, which administers all state-funded scholarship applications.

Statistics from the Japanese Embassy in Manila show that there were 99 and 94 Filipino scholars in Japan in 2005 and 2004, respectively.

The state-funded scholarship system for foreign students covers seven programs provided for: Research students, trainee teachers, scholarship students of the Young Leader's Program, undergraduates, Japanese studies/culture studies students, College of Technology students, and Senshu-gakko (special training college) students.

A report from Japan's Ministry of Foreign Affairs circulated during the ABCDE conference estimated that of the total 117,302 foreign students in 2004, 315 were Filipinos. The report indicated that the Filipino student community in Japan was the sixth biggest.

On the other hand, China had the biggest number (1,810) of citizens studying in Japan, followed by Thailand (622), Indonesia (600), Vietnam (530) and Bangladesh (440).

But while Japan offers more scholarship opportunities now than most other First World countries, getting accepted into its programs is by no means a piece of cake.

On average, about 700-800 Filipino citizens apply for educational grants in Japan each year, indicating an average acceptance rate of only 12-14 percent.

Language barrier

Applying for a scholarship grant in Japan entails less requirements than applying for one in the United States.

"I only needed to fill up the forms. There were no exams then; we [only] had a panel interview," Guillen said.

But those who do get accepted have to transcend language and cultural barriers to make the most of their stay.

"In the US, [it's] easy to blend in] because Filipinos are used to [American] culture. Here, it takes some adjustment," Recoter said.

The language barrier is the biggest hurdle of all.

Said Romero, sighing: "I could be a poster girl for [the movie] 'Lost in Translation.' I'd like to think that I can understand but cannot speak Nihongo, partly because I'm not really required to learn and speak the language in school. But outside, it gets me to my default mode of pa-smile-smile lang (just smiling) because I have a problem expressing what I want to say."

"It's a good thing the Japanese are very patient and appreciate the effort when I struggle with my nonexistent Nihongo skills—more like subject-verb, with a lot of animated gestures in between. So I still get to do local travels alone."

"I have Filipino friends who had no choice but learn the language, and they are doing well."

Another challenge

Guillen took a six-month intensive course in Nihongo.

"But I think it will never be enough," she said, adding that in her case, "the other big challenge was the university entrance examination."

"It was very difficult because my undergraduate major was sociology, while the program I was entering was actually engineering. I had to take a crash course in mathematics," she said.

To cope with the difficult cultural assimilation, Filipino students in Japan tend to band together into a sub-society. They form associations and groups and meet up once in a while.

Meanwhile, their proficiency in English is a great advantage, allowing most of them to earn extra income as private English tutors.

US philanthropy in Asia waning

For Japan, the student exchange contributes to building close human networks and promoting mutual understanding and friendly relationships with other countries.

Taking a more active leadership role in Asia in philanthropic activities, the world's second largest economy next to the United States recognizes that higher education and research—which propelled its phenomenal post-World War II growth—should be shared on a global scale to address challenges to humankind.

Tadashi Yamamoto, president of the Japan Center for International Exchange (JCIE), a non-government organization dedicated to strengthening Japan's role in international networks of cooperation, said US participation in Asia had actually been waning.

During a session at the ABCDE that discussed US philanthropy as a driving force in global aid, Yamamoto said the JCIE had just completed "a major study on the role of US philanthropy in postwar imperialism."

"Frankly speaking, the role of US foundations, as far as ... East Asia is concerned, is diminishing, the number of professional staff people deployed to this area has gone down, and their presence is very much lacking. In fact, the role they play in development and other efforts in this world is diminishing," he said.

Yamamoto was reacting to a paper delivered by Joseph Zimet, NGO liaison officer of the French development agency Agence Francaise de Developement, who predicted: "The world philanthropic scene will see a strengthening of the domination of American foundations, which have a more solid infrastructure."

"American philanthropy is emerging as a new global and transformational force acting at the global level," Zimet said.

'Very small percentage'

Victoria Garchitorena, president of the Philippines' Ayala Foundation and a panelist at the ABCDE session on US philanthropy, appeared to agree with Yamamoto.

"Certainly, we welcome the idea that American foundations are looking more globally as far as the issues of poverty are concerned," Garchitorena said, adding:

"To date, it's increasing, but it's still a very small percentage of US foundations that look beyond their borders. In fact one of the problems we see in the foundation landscape is that most of them prefer to focus on their own backyard, not even beyond their cities or states, much less to other countries in the world."

"We would like to see [Zimet's] idea becoming more accepted and integrated into their programs. The same might be true of European foundations, as most focus on their local needs."

she preferred a reenacted 2005 budget over a stripped-down 2006 budget.

"I really can't do anything if they destroy my budget," said the President in a rare interview on dzMM.

The House approved a P1.040-trillion budget in early April. After days of interpellation, the Senate passed a leaner P1.027-trillion budget on Thursday by slashing "pork barrel" items.

Free for realignment

Senate President Franklin Drilon said a reenacted budget would be "bad for the economy."

Under a reenacted budget, the President will enjoy a "lot of flexibility" in fund disbursements because many of the items in the 2005 budget are now free for realignment, Drilon said.

A fund becomes available for realignment after the project for which it is originally allocated has been completed.

Senator Arroyo said a reenacted budget would limit the government to using past allocations for "new needs" this year, and prevent it from using new revenues for new projects.

He worried about the money collected from the 12-percent expanded value-added tax.

"There's more money [in the new budget] because of the e-VAT. That's not covered in the 2005 budget, and the President can't go beyond that. So what will you do with the money? It's better that we utilize that for basic services so the people will benefit," Arroyo said.

His fellow panel member, Sen. Ralph Recto, conceded that it would be tough to pass a budget this week even as he raised the possibility of the President calling a special session to do this. "I don't think anyone wants a special session," Recto said.

Special session opposed

The President said she was against calling a special session.

"I would probably not call for a special session. We will only waste government funds and long hours with another protracted debate. We'd rather do what we can with the current budget," Ms Arroyo said.

As of press time, there was no word if the Senate and House panels, led by Sen. Manuel "Manny" Villar Jr. and Albay Rep. Joey Salceda, respectively, would meet last night.

The bicameral conference abruptly adjourned at around 9:30 p.m. Monday after less than an hour of meeting at the Philippine Coconut Authority in Quezon City that saw the senators and congressmen tangling over one issue—the cuts made by the Senate.

As far as Pacific Ocean

The senators stood by their version that slashed P26 billion from the budget's programmed funds and P37 billion from the unprogrammed funds. The congressmen insisted that all the cuts be restored.

A heated debate erupted 20 minutes into the closed-door proceedings, prompting Villar to call for a break and for both panels to go into separate executive sessions. After 30 minutes, the lawmakers returned to the executive lounge only to adjourn the conference.

Drilon said it was "difficult" for him to say if there was any room for compromise, but he and Minority Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. remained optimistic a "compromise budget" would be passed.

The House of Representatives is now open to a reenacted budget scenario this year.

"With personalities and politics coming into play, our positions are further apart as the Pacific Ocean where before it was just the South China Sea," Salceda said of the two panels.

Salceda, also chair of the House appropriations committee, said at a press conference that "reenactment is now a clear and present danger," pointing out that the panel members couldn't even set a date for the "next engagement."

"The only date we are aware of is Thursday which is the end of the session," said Salceda, who quickly blamed the impasse on politics rearing its ugly head.

Too much bad blood

"There's too much bad blood between the President and the Senate," said Salceda, pointing out that the 2006 budget was a hostage to the political crisis that continues to hound the country.

He said the poor were the biggest losers. "It would be a big blow to the gross domestic product and poverty reduction. The House strategy of gradual restoration of the P1.053-trillion has been blocked by the China wall of the senators."

Salceda attributed the disagreements over the P60 billion slashed by the Senate to the conflicting approaches employed by both panels.

Salceda said that during Monday's bicameral conference, the Senate wanted a "scrap-and-build approach," or to "agree on details first before agreeing to an aggregate (total) amount."

This position was opposed by the House panel.

Salceda said the Senate approach was "illogical" because "the cake is easier to cut if we have the cake. Otherwise, if you do that (Senate approach), you tend to miss out on efficiencies in budget allocation."

'Kilos Asenso'

The President remained hopeful that the senators at the conference would soften their stance and reinsert the items they had cut from the budget, specifically the P3-billion Kilos Asenso Support Fund and the P3.69-billion Kalayaan Barangay Fund.

She defended the financing programs the senators had dubbed as a virtual pork barrel of the Palace for Charter change.

"Kilos Asenso is the counterpart of the national government's programs with the local government such as for buying more land for agribusinesses, financing for micro entrepreneurs, and other projects that would benefit the common Filipino."

"The Kalayaan Barangay will be used to bring government support to far-flung, depressed areas so that residents will not turn into rebels," the President said.

She said these were ways to enable the gains from fiscal reforms to reach the poorest of the poor.

Upbeat

Drilon and Pimentel were also upbeat that the budget would be passed.

"We will try to finish the budget. It's too early to say what will happen. We'll try to pass the budget," Drilon said.

It was Drilon who initiated hearings of the Senate committee of the whole on the budget in mid-November last year to offset the delay in the House transmittal of the measure.

"I still believe that both panels can come to a reasonable agreement; and I think that we'll be able to approve the budget with cuts," Pimentel said, pointing out that the "hardening of positions" at the beginning was not uncommon.

"All part of growing pains. Or better still, part of labor pains. The budget will be delivered in a compromise manner. Not one side can claim total victory," he said.

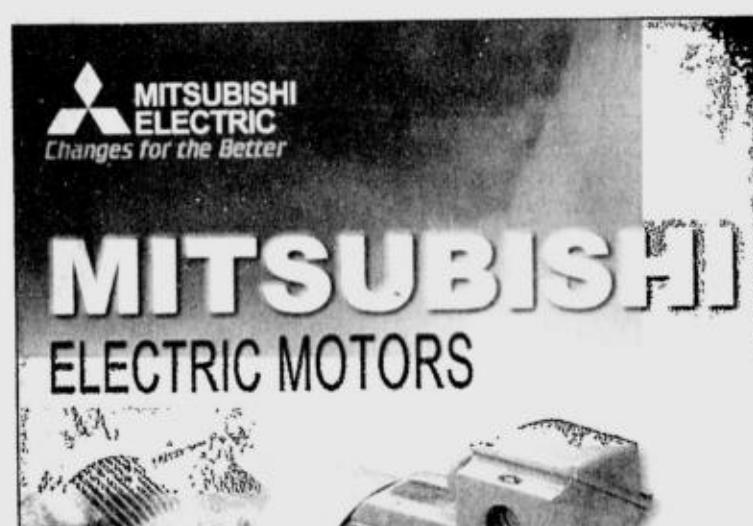

Senator Arroyo said the stalemate underscored the perception that the President had the final say on crucial matters, including the budget.

"The difficulty of the problem that both Houses face presents one clear picture, which is that the President holds the levers of power when it comes to the budget. What she wants, she will get," he said.

Smart little girl

If the budget is passed, Ms Arroyo could disapprove it, and fall back on a reenacted budget, or approve it with certain amendments, the senator said.

Asked if this was a win-win situation for the President, Arroyo said: "Well, it looks that way. That little girl is really smart. She has operated very smoothly. Faced with crisis after crisis, then in the face of budget, she will still have her final say."

Antigov't rally set on Migrants Day

By Jerome Aning

OVERSEAS FILIPINO workers currently in the country, families of those abroad and their supporters will mark Migrants Day today with a rally at Mendiola Bridge near Malacañang to denounce what they claimed was the government's neglect of the OFWs' welfare and plunder of OFW funds.

The militant OFW group Migrante International said the protest would also highlight the plight of thousands of OFWs languishing in foreign jails, were stranded or were victims of human rights violations in their host countries.

"The government has been treating OFWs as mere exports and dollar-earners. No serious effort has been made to attend to their needs swiftly and capably," said Migrante chair Connie Bragas-Regalado in an interview.

Regalado said the forced migration of Filipinos to look for work and the estrangement of their families were reasons Migrant Day should not be celebrated.

"The government is not sincerely addressing the worsening crisis of the already backward Philippine economy," she said. "It has not seriously undertaken the steps to genuine national industrialization but pursued its labor export policy to collect enough dollars to finance the bankrupt regime."

Regalado claimed the government's main objective for so long had been how to spend or misspend the money generated by the OFW recruitment and deployment industry and the insurance contributions and remittances made by OFWs.

This, she said, was very evident in the apparent plunder of the P8-billion OFW fund entrusted to the Overseas Workers Welfare Administration (OWWA).

She recalled that President Macapagal-Arroyo had ordered the release of $293,500 and another P5 million from the fund to finance Philippine support for the US war in Iraq. Also, P6 billion of the fund was transferred to the Land Bank and Development Bank of the Philippines for "liability-free management."

She said the President also directed the transfer of the P538 million OWWA medicare fund to PhilHealth just before the campaign for the 2004 national elections took place.

Regalado called the establishment of an OFW Bank "a classic example of being fried in one's own fat as the OFWs' deposits in Land Bank and DBP were seen to be tapped as seed money for the bank meant to capture OFWs remittances up to the last dollar."

Gov't agents seize ivory tusks from religious store

By Blanche S. Rivera

CUSTOMS AND ENVIRONMENT AGENTS RAIDED a store selling religious images in Sta. Cruz, Manila, yesterday following a tip about a lost shipment of 6,000 kilograms of ivory tusks, worth at least P30 million, that had been confiscated at the South Harbor last November.

The National Anti-Environment Crime Task Force (NAECTF) confiscated 94 different images made of ivory, 35 pieces of elephant tusks and 81 kgs of scrap from used tusks at the Our Lady of Manaoag religious shop.

Members of the task force also went to the house of the shop's owner in Paraaque last night and discovered that more ivory tusks had been loaded in the owner's Honda CRV.

The NAECTF agents were still waiting for the owner to arrive at his home at press time. Police said they would tow the vehicle if the owner refused to cooperate.

Tusks intact

The BOC reported the loss of the tusks only yesterday during a meeting with the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, which is the agency authorized to take custody of the seized tusks.

The BOC claimed the tusks were lost while in the custody of Asian Terminals Inc., where the 40-ft container van containing the shipment of tusks and mineral stones was being kept since November 2005.

During the meeting, it was also learned that customs agents at the Naia had confiscated another illegal shipment of ivory tusks in October 2005 but this remained intact in the BOC's custody.

DENR property

Environment Undersecretary Roy Kyamko said the BOC had rejected the DENR's many requests for the confiscated tusks to be turned over to its Protected Areas and Wildlife Bureau (PAWB).

As the country's representative to the Convention on International Trade for Endangered Species (CITES), the PAWB is supposed to take custody of items produced from endangered animals.

"We don't know why they refused to give it to us. They have their own reasons... The tusks are supposed to be DENR property. It was the DENR that provided the information that led to the confiscation of the tusks," Kyamko said in a phone interview.

Trans-shipment route

Environment Secretary Angelo Reyes, who heads the NAECTF, is helping a visiting team from the Lusaka Task Force, an international group that is investigating how the contraband goods found their way to the Philippines.

The Lusaka Task Force, which will be in the country for a week, is looking into reports that the Philippines may have become the new trans-shipment route for illegal traders of ivory tusks after arrests were made in Hong Kong and Vietnam.

African elephant tusks are much in demand in the world market, fetching a minimum of $50 per kg. A tusk of good quality can fetch a price of as high as $100 per kg, the DENR said.

Cora Davis, the Metro Manila director of the DENR, said the BOC has been surveying religious stores selling ivory images since last month when the bureau discovered that the tusks had disappeared from the ATI container.

Missing

It was not clear, however, how the BOC was able to confirm that the tusks found at the Our Lady of Manaoag shop were from the shipment that was seized at South Harbor in November and which had gone missing.

Reyes has ordered the creation of another task force to investigate how the ivory tusks disappeared from the BOC's custody at South Harbor.

9th Week in Ordinary Time

1st Reading: 2 Tim 1:1-3, 6-12
Gospel: Mark 12:18-27

The Sadducees came to Jesus. Since they claim that there is no resurrection, they questioned him in this way, "Master, in the Scriptures Moses gave us this law: 'If anyone dies and leaves a wife but no children, his brother must take the wife and give her a child who will be considered the child of his deceased brother.' Now, there were seven brothers. The first married a wife, but he died without leaving any children. The second took the wife and he, too, died leaving no children. The same thing happened to the third. Finally the seven died leaving no children. Last of all the woman died. Now, in the resurrection, to which of them will she be wife? For the seven had her as wife."

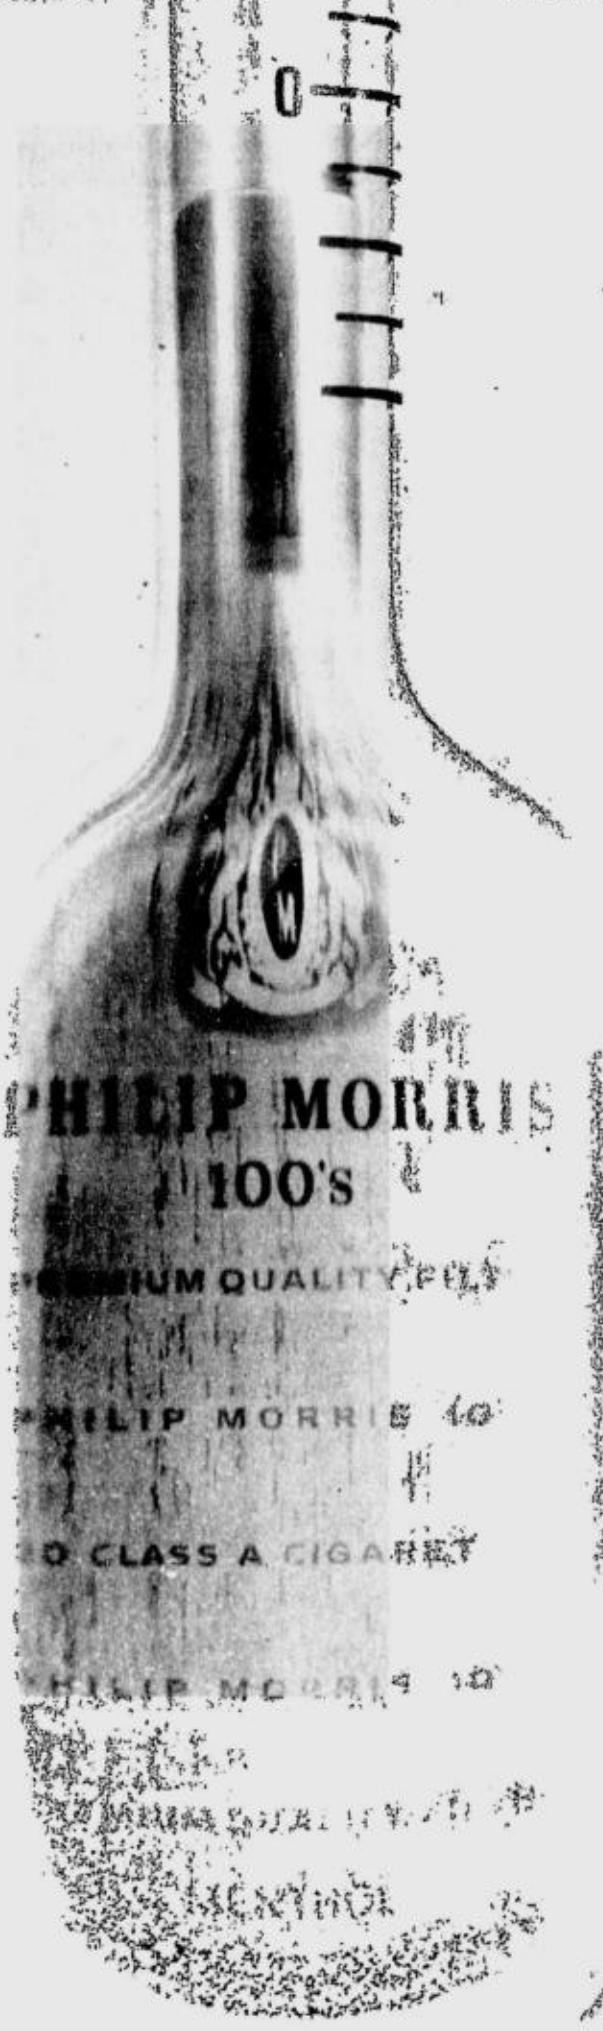

Jesus replied, "You could be wrong in this regard because you understand neither the Scriptures nor the power of God. When they rise from the dead, men and women do not marry but are like the angels in heaven."

Now, about the resurrection of the dead, have you never reflected on the chapter of the burning bush in the book of Moses? God said to him: I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob. Now, he is the God, not of the dead but of the living. You are totally wrong."

Commentary
Paul exhorts Timothy to be bold and let loose the Spirit that he has been given, to express it in wisdom and testimony that is strong and loving, and to be holy. We have been entrusted with the grace of the crucified and risen Jesus and we are to live in that light and power.

Jesus battles the Sadducees. They mock him about eternal life, but he boldly tells them they know nothing, for life in God is nothing like life here on earth. God is the God of life, and that is meant to be ever more abundant life here and now. Hereafter follows upon our lives lived in God now.

Government Warning is dangerous

Reds seek resumption of talks on rights violations

By Norman Bordadora

THE COMMUNIST-LED NATIONAL Democratic Front yesterday pressed the government to resume talks on nearly 800 cases of alleged human rights violations by both sides despite the breakdown of peace negotiations.

Out of the total of 799 complaints of alleged violations received by a joint government-NDF panel, 693 involved abuses by government security forces while 106 were blamed on NDF armed groups, a panel member said.

The NDF call for discussions on the cases coincided with a resurgence of killings of political activists around the country, which leftist groups blamed on government and paramilitary groups.

The complaints filed against government forces include 163 cases of killings involving 265 victims, according to a list provided by the NDF. They include people killed in alleged summary executions and 102 killed in alleged massacres.

Oversight body

The cases also include "forced disappearances" of 45 people.

Details of 106 complaints against communist armed groups were not immediately available.

Peace talks broke down about two years ago after the government accused the rebels of continued attacks and the NDF protested against the inclusion of the rebels in the so-called foreign terrorist list of the United States and the European Union.

The 799 cases are pending before the Joint Monitoring Committee (JMC) created by government and NDF peace negotiators in 2004 to oversee the implementation of their previous agreement on respect for human rights.

Dependent on peace talks

The JMC is funded by the Dutch government, which is brokering the peace talks.

"The (government) panel is trying to equate the convening of the JMC with the resumption of the peace talks. They are saying that there will be no JMC meeting unless the peace talks resume," said Marissa Dumanjug-Palo, head of the NDF section of the JMC's joint secretariat.

"That should not be the case because the human rights agenda has already been agreed upon by the two parties," Palo said in a media briefing at the JMC offices.

To make matters worse, some members of NDF group are being harassed by government forces, Palo said.

Palo said she herself had been tailed by motorcycle-riding men on her way to the JMC offices in Quezon City.

"The two motorcycles followed us the entire stretch of E. Rodriguez, maintaining a distance of one or two vehicles even if there was no vehicle between us," Palo said, recalling an incident she said happened on May 31. "(They) did not attempt to overtake us and always rode diagonal from each other."

Importance of JMC

She described one of the motorcycles as a "motorbike, the kind used by SWAT policemen", and said the other was much bigger.

NDF legal consultant Edre Olalia said the JMC was a useful venue for the two parties to discuss the complaints together and determine whether there were indeed human rights violations and that inaction on the 799 was not a reason to dissolve the JMC.

Military response

Composed of government and NDF representatives, the JMC is tasked to monitor implementation of the human rights agreement between the two sides. The joint secretariat, or JS, is its administrative and technical staff. The JMC and the JS are composed of Under their bilateral agreement, the JMC is supposed to meet at least every three months.

"However, since its last meeting on 15 April 2004, the JMC has not met again," JMC co-chair for the NDF, Fidel Agcaoili, said in a statement.

"The (government) has refused any JMC meetings until the resumption of formal talks which the (government) itself has suspended," Agcaoili said, stressing that the implementation of the two sides' agreement on human rights was not dependent on the formal peace negotiations.

As a result, the JMC has not conducted any joint investigation of the complaints, he said.

The military threw back at the rebels their allegations that soldiers and paramilitary groups were behind the killings of militants, saying a "special operation team" of the New People's Army rebels was behind the murders based on what it said were subversive documents. CA committee backs Esperon promotion

By Juliet Labog-Javellana

THE DEFENSE COMMITTEE OF THE COMMISSION on Appointments yesterday endorsed the confirmation of Maj. Gen. Hermogenes Esperon Jr.'s promotion to lieutenant general despite the vigorous objection of Sen. Rodolfo Biazon.

Biazon had asked the committee to defer action on the promotion of Esperon, commander of the Philippine Army, until after the Armed Forces of Malacafang has submitted a military fact-finding committee's report on allegations that Esperon and other generals were involved in the rigging of the 2004 elections to ensure President Macapagal-Arroyo's victory.

But Rep. Jurdin Jesus Romualdo, chair of the CA defense committee, overruled Biazon's motion and the rest of the committee decided to endorse Esperon's confirmation to the CA caucus and plenary session today. Biazon would be allowed to raise his objection anew today, Romualdo said.

Rep. Prospero Pichay Jr., committee vice chair, said Esperon will most likely be confirmed today because it will be the last plenary session of the CA before Congress adjourns on Friday.

"There is a good possibility he will be confirmed tomorrow. After all he's not responsible (for the Mayuga report)," Pichay said.

Biazon maintained that Esperon should not be promoted to the next rank until the Mayuga report is submitted to the commission.

He said the CA should examine the Mayuga report because it determines whether appointees are fit for their positions. He said the allegations about the involvement of Esperon in the alleged election cheating in Mindanao were serious.

"I have not made a conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of this general; what I need is a resolution of the issue," Biazon said.

He said if the President really wants Esperon's promotion, she should release the Mayuga report to the commission.

Esperon said he would not answer questions about the Mayuga report or about the election fraud when Biazon and Sen. Jinggoy Estrada, who also opposes the promotion, question him in today's CA session.

"I am submitting myself to the wisdom of the members of the commission," Esperon said.

Esperon and the other general's involvement in the alleged election fraud surfaced in the "Hello Garci" tapes. A military committee headed by Navy chief Vice Admiral Mateo Mayuga investigated the allegations and subsequently cleared the generals, but its report was never released in full.

Land mine kills 2 Marines in South

TWO MARINES WERE KILLED YESTERDAY when one of them stepped on an improvised land mine while they were on patrol in Tawi-Tawi, a military spokesperson said.

Two clans fighting over land and the Abu Sayyaf terror group were among those suspected of planting the mine.

The Marines, a first lieutenant and a private who were not identified, were from the 11th Marine Battalion based in Tawi-Tawi. They were patrolling in Barangay Daldatal outside Sapa-Sapa town when one of them stepped on an improvised explosive device, Lt. Col. Ariel Caculitan said.

"The officer involved was trying to settle the differences between the two parties but, unfortunately, on the way they had an accident," said Caculitan, adding that no other details were immediately available.

A day earlier, Marines recovered an unexploded improvised land mine.

Caculitan said one of the two clans could have planted the mines to try to keep the other away from the disputed piece of land.

Caculitan said no shots were fired at the Marines after the blast, which usually followed a rebel ambush.

The Muslim extremist Abu Sayyaf group and bandits also operate in area.

"We still don't know who was behind the blast but the Abu Sayyaf is among the threat groups in the area," Caculitan said. AP; AFP

Rescue

YESTERDAY THE NATION NEWSPAPER OF THAILAND published an editorial on educational reform. It said that what should be a great national priority is foundering; the ongoing political crisis in that country means that the "master plan to modernize the education system has not only ground to a halt but may even shift into reverse." Thailand's educational system, according to the editorial, is "inefficient and badly run," and "bogged down by bargaining between hesitant politicians and teachers fighting to maintain the status quo."

Thai policy was meant to decentralize the educational system; bureaucracies have been subdivided but don't necessarily talk to each other. Worst of all, the Thai newspaper says, "teachers tend to stick to the old corruption-prone patronage system instead of a meritocracy, and often have an outdated mindset that discourages adoption of innovative teaching methods." As in the Philippines, the paper says that the "only big improvement has been the substantial salary increase for teachers. But the government failed to use the pay adjustment to motivate them to be more innovative in their teaching techniques and adopt the new student-centered learning style."

We put forward the Thai view not only because it echoes Philippine concerns but because it indicates that education is a regional concern and, indeed, crisis.

Educators in Bicol, for example, a model in many ways for the possibilities and realistic achievements local initiatives and empowerment can accomplish, have put forward many interesting and innovative proposals for educational reform. The first of their proposals is to do away with the administrative layers that eat up funds before they can tangibly affect students. This can be done by having provinces and cities directly disburse income allocated for education. Local governments can raise salaries and the qualifications required to retain a teaching position. Local responsibility for the quality of education also makes education a local elections issue.

This means, too, flexibility to adopt methods that make more rational use of the existing educational infrastructure. One of our reports last Monday pointed to the concept of vouchers, in which the state subsidizes the education of students who can't be accommodated in the public schools but can't afford private education. Former Education Undersecretary Juan Miguel Luz, in his commentary, explained the efforts of GATSPE, which can educate a class of 50 students in private schools through subsidies amounting to P200,000 as compared to the P625,000 it would cost the public school system to build, furnish and staff a new classroom.

Indeed, at a budget allocation of P4,000 per student in the GATSPE program, savings of P400 per student can be realized, the measly annual expenditure for the Filipino child being P4,600. This indicates an inferior education as it is, as our report last Monday showed. For that amount, a 20 percent passing average for the Upcat entrance exam is achieved. But raise the amount to P17,900, the amount currently spent in science high schools, and competitiveness is doubled, to a passing rate of 40 percent. Spend P68,000 per student, as the Philippine Science High School does, and the passing rate becomes a world-class 90 percent. Some educators in Naga City calculate that greater local control on education spending would allow P6,667 to be actually spent on students there—a significant increase by any measure.

But education reform—or rescue, as it should be properly called in our country's case—requires many things. Increased private and public sector partnerships, for one. Stripping away bureaucratic layers and finding a mechanism to make the bureaucracy answerable to the people, for another. Discarding outdated fetishes such as insisting on building classrooms while disregarding the shortage of teachers or the need to train better ones, even as private schools operate far below peak capacity. The national goal must be not to go through the motions of educating children, but rather finding every way, especially new ways, to ensure every child is educated better, and with better value.

Why the bureaucratic runaround on water?

I DON'T UNDERSTAND IT. THIS CHARADE has been going on for 13 years now. I am reminded of it again because of the lack of water in many areas in Metro Manila and environs. Plus the current controversy over a proposed housing project, being pushed by shadowy characters under mysterious circumstances inside the La Mesa watershed, that will pollute the water in the reservoir.

Here are the facts:

• La Mesa Dam is the principal source of water for 12 million residents of the metropolis. Aside from the water generated by its own watershed, additional water is piped in from Angat and Ipo dams in Bulacan. In addition, many subdivisions, factories, commercial establishments, as well as individual homes, source their water from deep wells. So much fresh water is being sucked out that the underground aquifers are running dry and salt water is taking its place in the aquifers. Result: Water being pumped out of the wells is salty.

• Because of this, the National Water Resources Board has prohibited the use of deep wells and the drilling of more. "If water continues to be sucked out," said NWRB Executive Director Ramon Alikpala, "the ground above the aquifers will subside, making them more susceptible to floods." But he quickly added that he could stop residents and establishments in three cities (Las Piñas, Parañaque and Muntinlupa) from using deep wells "because of a lack of an alternative water source in these areas." He proposed that deep wells be banned in the rest of Metro Manila.

• While many areas are engulfed by gigantic floods after the slightest thunderstorm, drinking water is scarce. We see evidence of that daily on TV as residents in poorer areas line up for water with all sorts of containers.

• Every summer, there is a shortage of water—not only for drinking and washing but also for agriculture. When a major pipeline from Angat is blocked or damaged, much of Metro Manila goes thirsty for days while the damage is repaired.

• While the two water concessionaires are busy laying down new pipes, little or no water comes out of these pipes. There just isn't enough water to supply the needs of the population.

The government is dreaming of harnessing the Laibang Dam near Quezon, but that is decades away. The government keeps talking about pumping up water from Laguna and Taal lakes, but those are also still dreams.

• Yet there is a ready source of fresh water in a reservoir nearby. All you have to do is connect a new pipe from the reservoir to the La Mesa reservoir a few kilometers downstream and you have millions of gallons of additional water daily. Every day millions of gallons of water just flow over the dam to the Marikina and Pasig rivers, and out to sea.

This is the mystery that I don't understand. We have a perennial shortage of water, there is a ready source of water to relieve the shortage, but the government agencies in charge of water do not want to tap it. This is the Wawa Dam in Montalban (now renamed Rodriguez) which used to be the main source of water of Manila.

Here's an even deeper mystery: A Filipino company that has helped put up a big dam in the Cordilleras is offering to tap Wawa Dam—for free! There is no legal obstacle to the proposal, but the NWRB is using the longest red tape in the world to delay the project. This has been going on for the last 13 years. Why?

Another mystery: Recently, Manila Water proudly announced that it would supply water to Antipolo and neighboring towns. Where will the water come from? From La Mesa! Water from La Mesa would be pumped up, at considerable expense, to Antipolo, etc.

"Why not from Wawa Dam?" I asked. "It's already there."

No answer. Ponder this: Water will be pumped from La Mesa, which is already short of water supply, to several communities that already has a reservoir full of water that flows uselessly out to sea every day. Where is the logic there?

It appears that I am not the only one perplexed by the mysteries. I received a letter from the proponent of tapping the Wawa Dam, Oscar Violago, owner of the San Lorenzo Ruiz Builders & Developers Group, who has also read the NWRB statements. He is wondering why the NWRB has given it the runaround. I have posed the same question to Alikpala a couple of times, and I couldn't get a satisfactory answer.

"It is unfortunate that the NWRB, after all these years, is now admitting that it has not done anything to ensure that the water supply of Metro Manila would be sufficient and that it now says it has no alternative water source in sight," Violago said in his letter. "This leads us to ask again why, after 13 years of bureaucratic runaround (we applied for our water permit in 1993), the NWRB has yet to approve our company's water permit to extract, supply and deliver the water from Wawa Dam to Metro Manila. We are willing and able to supply upwards of 1.5 million cubic meters of potable water per day, which is more than enough to solve once and for all the perennial water crisis."

"...We cannot understand NWRB's frame of mind," Violago continued. "We have repeatedly stated that our project would be at no cost to the government and that all risks would be to our account... We wonder how many more years Metro Manila will have to endure this lack of water when by a single stroke of the pen, Director Alikpala and the NWRB can make the water shortage a thing of the past."

Poetic justice

THERE'S THE RUB

Conrado
de Quiros

RAUL GONZALEZ IS PISSED OFF AT TIME magazine reporter Nelly Sindayen. He has an interpretation for why she refuses to appear before him to reveal the names of those who attended a meeting in Jose Cojuangco's place last Feb. 24: "I think she's sympathetic to the other side."

I am tempted to say that I can understand why Gonzalez does not understand the first thing about journalism since he is not a journalist. But he doesn't understand the first thing about justice either, and he is supposed to be the justice secretary. His lack of understanding about things has nothing to do with professions, it's congenital.

It's a cardinal principle in a democracy that a journalist may not be compelled to reveal his sources or testify against people. He may do so if he wishes, but he may not be compelled to do it. The exercise of his profession demands that he keep certain things secret. He betrays confidentiality, his sources will dry up and he will no longer be able to pursue his story. It is to protect the public's right to know that democracy protects the journalist's right to not divulge certain things.

It has little to do with being sympathetic to one side or the other, although journalists, for all their efforts at objectivity, can't always help but feel sympathetic toward certain things. Particularly when the issues are starkly etched in black and white, in good and evil. The great Ed Murrow did not stop being objective while waging a crusade against the truly evil Joseph McCarthy and was clearly sympathetic to the cause of liberty against an order built on terror and paranoia. I don't know if Nelly feels the same way, but I know I do. If journalists feel sympathetic to a side these days, it is not their fault. It is the fault of a regime that has made itself utterly unsympathetic.

But far more than that, what in hell is Gonzalez complaining about? There is no law in a democracy that compels journalists to reveal their sources or inform the world about the background of their stories. But there is a law that compels public officials, never mind ordinary citizens, to reveal what they know about wrongdoing. There is a law that says public officials must appear before Congress when they are summoned to shed light on the truth, which is the foundation of law and justice. There is a law—in a democracy, anyway—that says government must be transparent at all times, its existence resting on the sufferance of the people. You may—no, you must—force them under pain of being fired or doing time to tell what they know about wrongdoing. That is a law that exists not just in the statute books but in human hearts.

Yet you do not find Gonzalez demanding that that law be obeyed. You find him demanding that that law be screwed. His boss, GMA herself, has done what no other president before her, including Ferdinand Marcos, has ever done, which is to prevent under pain of prosecution, court martial, or jail, or all of the above, any government official from appearing before the Senate without her permission to talk about wrongdoing under her. Or more to the point, by her.

The Supreme Court has already scrapped that atrocity—heaven forbid we call it a law—saying it has as much place in democracy as pornographic pictures in church. The Supreme Court has already rescinded that madness—heaven forbid we attribute any sanity to it—saying it belongs only to a country that has barbed wires strung around it. Yet government officials still refuse to appear before Senate hearings. Eduardo Ermita says the order is still in force since it has been appealed before the courts, as though the concept of government officials being gagged can possibly have any merit by the ways of heaven and earth.

You do not find Gonzalez irascibly demanding that Brig. Gen. Francisco Gudani and Col. Alexander Balutan be allowed—no, compelled—to appear before the Senate and tell the world what they know, and that if GMA is preventing them from doing so it can only be because she is sympathetic to the other side, which is herself. You do not find Gonzalez thundering forth with a scowl that Gudani and Balutan were by their own admission at the scene of the crime and therefore in an absolute position to name the criminals. We find him instead remembering only that there is a pathetic attempt by his boss to cling to an order she issued capriciously, which the Supreme Court has already junked along with the day's garbage, because like her very existence it still hangs by the thread of a tenuous appeal.

Is there any reason why Nelly Sindayen should be forced to appear before Gonzalez? No. At the very least she has a journalistic right not to cough up her sources, and at the very most she has a human right not to throw up before such a sight. Is there any reason why Gudani and Balutan should be allowed to appear before the Senate? Yes. At the very least every citizen, not to speak of government official, has the duty to report what is wrong, and at the very most what they have to report is a matter of life and death for the nation.

Is there any compelling need for Nelly Sindayen to shed light on the plot to oust GMA? No. At the very least the leaders of the plot are well known to government and have for co-conspirators 65 percent of the population, and at the very most a certified plotter has no business complaining about presumed plots to overthrow a president. Is there a compelling need for Gudani and Balutan to shed light on who won the vote in Muslim Mindanao? Go figure.

Sindayen refuses to do as Gonzalez bids? Well, we may not get justice in this country under this justice secretary and his boss, but now and then we can still get some very poetic one.

One year after 'Garci'

ANALYSIS

Amando Doronila

A YEAR AFTER SURVIVING THE POLITICAL CRISIS generated by the disclosure of the infamous Garcialano tapes, the Arroyo administration is marking the event as a watershed.

Making an assessment of the performance of the Arroyo presidency two years after her election in 2004, Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye had to gall to suggest at the Newsmakers Forum that President Macapagal-Arroyo had weathered the crisis unscathed, and that it's now time to put the turbulence of 2005-2006 behind. "I think today is better than yesterday and tomorrow will even be better," he said.

Bunye did not offer any basis for the claim more solid than the mere fact that the administration has survived. In highlighting political survival as the main accomplishment of the administration during the first two years of its second term, he has provoked the issue to be raised of how big a price the nation had to pay for this. More important than the survival of the administration in the past two years, it may be asked whether the country will survive another four years of the Arroyo presidency.

The turmoil of the past 12 months has left the President deeply wounded, and the administration severely damaged and limping. It is astonishing how on the basis of just muddling through, the President can declare with absolute confidence that she would "stay on as President until 2010 and not one day later."

The President has survived by digging deep into the reserve powers of the presidency to defend Fortress Malacañang from a year of sustained siege by her political foes. The field of combat is littered with many casualties. National emergency was declared in February, leaving in its wake damaged institutions that guarantee political liberties. The emergency and the battle for survival have reopened old cleavages between the Left and the military Right and have polarized the nation again along this ideological and social divide.

Administration defenders base their rosy outlook for the remaining four years on the claim that the President had faced down the mass resignation of key Cabinet members last July, quashed an impeachment complaint in the House, wore down a campaign of street protests demanding her ouster, and aborted a coup attempt. They cite economic data showing the economy grew 5.5 percent in the first quarter higher than the 4.2 percent growth of last year, the rise of the peso exchange rate, the rally of the stock market, and the value-added tax reform. They claim that the administration now sits on more solid footing than a year ago and "is prepared to make tough, maybe unpopular decisions, to set to it that economic programs are really implemented."

The thrust of this statement is that the economy can take off despite political uncertainty and instability, but the other aspect of this is that stability can be ensured by political repression and the curtailment of political liberties. But this presentation ignores the costs of political stability that is not founded on political consensus but secured by repressive measures. Already we are reaping a heavy price from this policy of repression and of regime survival built on the strategy of fanning social conflict, with the mounting death toll of people branded as enemies of the regime.

The regime's presentation of the political outlook suggests that its survival has been purchased at the price of blood and continuing political strife. From a more sinister political aspect, the regime is offering a formula for economic takeoff, that is, economic benefits in exchange for political repression and a guaranteed tenure until 2010.

The turmoil of the past 12 months has revealed the glaring institutional weaknesses of Philippine democracy. It exposed the consolidation of political powers by the President during the past five years, allowing her to acquire a majority in the House and to build a strong party coalition through Lakas—resources crucial to killing an impeachment complaint—and to mobilize rural and local government support to counter urban-based attempts to unseat her.

The turmoil unmasked the weakness of the institutional opposition, highlighted by the Lakas majority in the House, and the fragmented distribution of seats to parties in the Senate, where members act as individuals, or small blocs, more than as party members.

This has resulted in developments favorable to the President and the division of Congress on key initiatives designed to keep her in power and serve her term. The President has taken advantage of the truncation of Congress to push her campaign for constitutional change leading to a shift from the presidential to the parliamentary system. The House of Representatives and the Senate are divided over the mode of constitutional change: whether to do it through a constituent assembly or through a constitutional convention. The House wants a constituent assembly, while the Senate wants a convention. This division foreshadows a period of legislative stalemate.

This balance of forces is the basis for the President's belief that she will stay in power until 2010, not her ability to deliver economic results. The failure of her opponents to mobilize mass protests to oust her through another people power uprising makes the regime believe it can run roughshod over resistance to her continued stay in power.

The President's strategy for hanging on to power promises intensification of conflict and turmoil in the next four years. A few flash points stand in the way, including the Cha-cha issue and political repression.

Traveling with children

Rina Jimenez-David

IN RESPONSE TO REPORTS OF CHILD TRAFFICKING AND KIDNAPPING, THE DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL WELFARE AND DEVELOPMENT (DSWD) decades ago required minors who were traveling abroad unaccompanied by any adult, or by an adult who was neither a parent nor a guardian, to present a travel clearance before being allowed to leave the country.

This was because Filipino children at that time were either being smuggled out of the country for sex trafficking or other exploitative purposes, or spirited out by one parent or a guardian as a way of skirting disputes over custody. While the clearances have proven effective in curbing child trafficking and kidnapping, parents have also complained about the extra work needed to secure clearances even when they were traveling with their own children. I remember, while my children were still minors, making sure I always brought with me a copy of my children's birth certificates and our marriage contract, as well as a letter of authorization from my husband, whenever I needed to travel abroad with one or both my children. It was an annoyance, true, but still better than risking trauma and major inconvenience at the airport.

Now, "based on the actual experiences of the field implementers and other stakeholders," Social Welfare Secretary Esperanza Cabral has issued amendments to the guidelines for minors traveling abroad. It may come a little late, as the season for vacations abroad has ended with the opening of school here, but it should prove useful in the future.

The DSWD says the amended guidelines "simplify and shorten application (for) and issuance of travel clearance."

"The travel clearance can be used for multiple travels within the one-year validity period, provided that conditions under which the travel clearance was issued have not changed. If a change in conditions occur, like change of traveling companion, a new travel clearance must be secured," says the DSWD. "A child traveling with either parent or with his or her solo parent or legal guardian does not need a travel clearance or the Parental Travel Permit, which was previously required for a minor traveling with only one parent."

WHO needs a travel clearance? Any minor (below 18 years old) traveling alone to a foreign country except children whose parents are in the foreign service, are living abroad or are immigrants (provided they have the necessary documentation), and any minor traveling abroad accompanied by a person other than his/her parents.

No clearance is needed when a child is traveling with both or either parents or with his/her solo parents or legal guardian, again, provided the needed documentation is made available (such as the death certificate of one parent, or certification that no marriage took place in the case of a single parent).

Applications for travel clearance together with the supporting documents required should be submitted or filed by the parent or legal guardian or a duly authorized representative at any DSWD Field or regional office. Application forms may be obtained from any DSWD field office or travel clearance office. They may also be downloaded from the DSWD website www.dswd.gov.ph. More information on applying for and getting a Travel Permit may also be obtained from the same website.

FOUR Filipinas—Jennifer Dugena, US-based Eliza Escano, Estrella Santos and Vivian Limpin, who contributed her poem "Soltera," published in the Sunday Inquirer Magazine a few years back—are included in a unique anthology of women's works entitled "Imagining Ourselves."

The book is the result of a brainstorm of Paula Goldman, a PhD candidate at Harvard, who asked herself the question: "What defines today's generation of women?"

"Curious about how the experiences of this new generation of adult women differed from those who had come before," Goldman, says a press release, "thought a book could showcase the power and talent of this group to a wider audience." Joining forces with the International Museum of Women in San Francisco, Goldman sent out a call for submissions, asking women to submit artwork and writing on the topic.

Thousands of responses later, and after months of sifting through the submitted material, Goldman came up with "Imagining Ourselves: Global Voices from a New Generation of Women," which was launched worldwide last March 8, International Women's Day, and launched locally last May 31 at Powerbooks Greenbelt.

The publication of the book is accompanied by a major global campaign aimed at empowering the next generation of women, including an online exhibit and a series of international events and gatherings.

"Entertaining, challenging, funny and thought provoking, the book includes 105 entries, representing 57 countries and virtually every populated region of the globe," says its publisher. Some notable contributors are Queen Rania of Jordan, singer-songwriter Ani DiFranco, novelist Zadie Smith, and many more.

"In contributions that include photographs, songs, poems, paintings, collages and prose, young women discuss their lives, sharing the differences between their worlds and their mother's worlds. These brave women boldly address the challenges they and their cultures face, wielding their power to create positive social change. Israeli singer Achinoam Nini tells how her life changed when she gave birth; Bolivian painter Valentina Campos celebrates the close ties between grandmothers and granddaughters; Def poet Aya DeLeon fantasizes about going clubbing if women ran the hip hop industry; and Toyin Sokefun of Nigeria explores the space between society's 'ideal beauty' and women's self-images."

roasted. Still watching how the food was prepared had no effect on my enjoyment of the end product.

A generation reared in the airconditioned comfort of supermarkets probably thinks milk comes from tetra packs and some fruits come fresh from a dull black or grey to a delicious bright red as it is being cooked. She was told that crabs, for example, had to be electrocuted with a rod before being cooked. Gilda refused to be edified on the grounds that we may be inhumane to things we eat, but we are—or we try to be—humane to people. Needless to say the book never saw print.

The late E. Aguilar Cruz once told me of a group of American women, members of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA) who complained about the wild birds that were being peddled along the Pampanga stretch of MacArthur Highway (this was in the days before the North Luzon Expressway was built). The concerned women tried to influence public opinion on the way the birds were tied upside-down in the heat. Perhaps they didn't know that when these birds were dressed for cooking, their feathers were plucked out while they were still alive to maintain the tenderness of the meat. Did they even know that ducks were not slaughtered quickly through decapitation but drowned in a bowl of vinegar, again to preserve its flavor and tenderness when cooked?

In a fabulous restaurant in Osaka, Japan, where our hospitable former Consul General Antonio Vilamayor would take guests like former President Fidel V. Ramos, they served seafood fresh—so fresh that one dish was sashimi plucked out of a live fish. The fish was laid out on a platter, its head and tail still whole and moving, but its body sliced up and ready to eat. While it was good, I still prefer sashimi to be firm and cold rather than warm and chewy. Was this good preference or an experience of culture?

Food should be something we can ingest naturally without thinking, but because of culture and history we are drawn to the tastes of the familiar and are repelled by the unfamiliar. This explains the cliche that what is food to one is poison to another.

The best example here is the kamaru or mole cricket. One used to go to Everybody's Café in San Fernando, Pampanga, to taste this delicacy, but now it is a staple in Kapampangan restaurants in Manila. It is sautéed in garlic and onion and fried in such a way that it is crunchy on the outside and creamy on the inside. It is heavenly to some and revolting to others, just like balut or durian.

I'm adventurous with food and will try anything once, although I think I draw the line on the now legendary monkey brain taken fresh out of a live creature's cranium.

History has a lot to do with what we eat and do not eat, but until Doreen Fernandez came along, food was not considered worthy of academic study. Half a century ago Nick Joaquin already suggested looking at history from a different viewpoint: rather than building on important events pegged on the names and deeds of famous people, he directed our attention to things that made us what we are today. What would have happened if we did not experience the first globalization in the 16th-century when now familiar fruits and vegetables were exchanged between the Philippines and Mexico? What would Filipino life be without corn or chocolate, chico, sayote and camote? Can we imagine life without gusado?

If food defines who we are, it may be a way to catch that elusive thing we call national identity.

Illiterate

IT LOOKS LIKE WE HAVE AN EXTENDED LENTEN penance period in the Philippines. Every start of a new school year, the broadcast and print media lead the nation in self-flagellation over the dismal state of our educational system.

I think that's needed, but I also hope that after this first week of classes, we can continue to face up to the problem in our schools, going beyond the usual lamentations.

The last few days we've been treated to the INQUIRER Investigative Team report on the state of education in the Philippines. Tuesday's installment focused on the Philippines' low scores in the international Trends in Math and Science Study (TIMSS) conducted in 2003. The INQUIRER featured our scores in comparison with those of the United States and several neighboring Asian countries where we were at the bottom of the league.

Peer review

Curious, I went into the Internet and was able to download the highlights from the TIMSS report. Mind you, "high lights" here still meant more than a hundred pages but the data had been "crunched" to the most essential points, allowing more people to review and analyze the numbers.

Let me bring out the major points I uncovered in a fairly quick browse-and-analyze session:

First, we should know who conducts the study and what their methodology is. TIMSS is administered by the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) under the US Department of Education. The center is described as "the primary federal entity for collecting, analyzing and reporting data related to education in the United States and other nations."

Now why would the US government be interested in looking at other nations' educational performance? Mainly it's for comparison purposes, a kind of review among peers. For years now, educators in the US have warned that American students are lagging behind their peers in other developed countries, especially in the fields of science and math. They educators rightly realize that their status as the world's most powerful nation could be threatened if they don't improve on their educational system. TIMSS is there to help the US keep track of its educational system's performance.

There have been three rounds of TIMSS conducted so far, the first in 1995, then 1999 and the latest in 2003. The last survey's results were released in December 2004. It's an impressive study, involving students at the fourth and eighth grade levels in 46 countries. (I presume that eighth-grade level in the Philippines means 2nd year high school, given that we have six elementary school years.) The samples are quite large in each country; for the Philippines, it was 6,917 students from 137 schools.

The tests are designed to probe into "PSI" or problem solving and inquiry tasks, looking at how students are able to integrate information in various math and science fields, some of which I'll name later. The tests were similar throughout the world, with efforts made to adjust for cultural differences.

It's interesting that fourth graders were not allowed to use calculators but for the eighth graders, countries were left to decide on their own whether they'd allow it or not. American students were allowed calculators "to reflect conditions in the real world."

Problem areas

The test results were broken down by countries, test areas, and even sex. For the US, the results were also broken down according to poverty measures, ethnicities, public/private schools.

To show the wealth of information that's in these statistics, let me share some insights I got from a very quick one-hour browsing of the data for the Philippines. The percentages here refer to correct scores.

In the math tests, our 8th graders seemed to struggle with measurements (e.g., temperature differences), scoring 35 percent compared to the international average of 44 percent. But they did badly in algebra (23 percent compared to the international average of 45 percent) and geometry (11 percent for Filipinos, 28 percent internationally). The fourth graders were again not too bad with measurements, but did miserably with basic numbers (e.g., proportions). I suspect all this has something to do with the difficulties students have with abstractions. It doesn't help that these concepts have to be taught in English to students who can barely speak the language.

In the sciences, our fourth graders fared very badly with the life sciences (5 percent compared to the international average of 29 percent), but did better with the earth sciences (33 percent compared to 37 percent internationally).

That situation is reversed with 8th graders: they did better in the life sciences (45 percent versus an international average of 58 percent) but fared poorly in the earth sciences (38 percent versus 62 percent internationally). Their worst scores were in chemistry, with only 5 percent compared to an international average of 46 percent.

Are the learning problems rooted in teaching methods? In textbooks? In the teachers' own grasp of the subjects? That's what we should be probing into, and finding remedial measures for.

Functional literacy

There's more waiting to be analyzed in these statistics. If it's any consolation, the Philippines did show improvement in both math and science scores between 1999 and 2003.

I'm also intrigued by the gender aspect. In the US, girls have lower scores than boys for math and science. In the Philippines, it's the reverse.

TIMSS is important to help us assess how functional our literacy is. For years now, we've boasted about having one of the world's highest literacy rates and how that literacy, together with some command of English, allows us to export workers to the world. The TIMSS results warn us that we could lose our edge for the overseas labor market, even as we stagnate with domestic development because the next generation won't be able to tackle simple problems that require literacy in math and science.

We need to maximize the use of these tests. Some years back, I was asked by the UP School of Economics to analyze results from the National Elementary Achievement Test (NEAT) and the National Secondary Achievement Test (NSAT) and I was amazed at how much information was waiting to be mined from the data. Unfortunately, the two exams degenerated into a contest among schools, with teachers giving review classes and test results leaking out so the tests were no longer required for all schools. If it were properly administered, NSAT could be an important monitoring tool.

Alas, we maltreat our statistics. Politicians and government officials mangle the figures to suit their own interests, or, neglect the figures, failing to use them for policy reforms. Our leaders' attitudes toward statistics are themselves telling, showing how we've failed to educate Filipinos, even those from an earlier generation, about the value of science and math. Governed by dishonest illiterates, can we dare hope for a better educational system?

A message many need to hear

THIS IS IN REACTION TO RINA JIMENEZ-David's column titled "What about the teenage mom?" (PDI, 5/12/06) The way I see it, Sandin Lee's teenage mother was another sad casualty of our society's obsession with "sexual and reproductive rights."

A 14-year-old has no business having sex with men who have no commitment to her? This is playing with fire. We don't put up with kids playing with fire; we get them to stop the dangerous behavior at once. We don't tell them, "It's okay if you play with fire, just wear asbestos gloves."

David asks what kind of information the

A call to arms for pensioners

THERE IS NO QUESTION THAT THE MONTHLY Social Security System pension is not enough to purchase even just the medicines required and needed by elderly and retired employees.

To alleviate the plight of pensioners, which is getting to be more difficult each day with the unending rise in the prices of basic goods, Rep. Douglas Cagay and Rep. Eduardo V. Roquero filed House Bill No. 1549 and HB 3286, respectively. Both were filed in 2004.

Unfortunately the bills, and others of similar intent filed by other lawmakers much earlier, are sleeping in Congress.

May I therefore call on all SSS pensioners, as well as their relatives, associates and sympathizers, to visit, call, write or text their respective representatives or as many members of the House of Representatives as they can, to convince them into "reactivating" the bills; then to constantly follow up with them, by any means of communication, the passage of the bills into law.

We, pensioners, cannot expect the government to increase or adjust our benefits without our prodding. We will never get the benefits we deserve in these difficult times if we keep on with our indifference. Let us speak in one solid, big, loud voice of woe.

Please text your full name, result of talk and name of congressman for record purposes so that we, in turn, can reciprocate their good deed in some later time.

Albano's unresponsive response

AS A REJOINDER TO EMMANUEL ALBANO'S letter (PDI, 5/22/06), let me say that he did respond to my letter but he did not answer my questions. The questions are no different from those that I e-mailed to the Office of the House Speaker on Dec. 17 and 22, 2005, and on March 1, 2006. I e-mailed the questions to Albano who, in an earlier letter (PDI, 3/1/06), urged the Senate to debate with the House on Charter change. None of the e-mails merited a reply from the Speaker or Albano, for which reason I wrote one for the INQUIRER. (PDI, 4/13/06)

Albano's letter was certainly unresponsive. It only made clearer to me that the Cha-cha proponents only tell what they want to tell the people, not what the people want or need to know. Unless they fully answer the questions I raised—the problems Cha-cha seeks to solve, the roots of the problems, and a logical cause and effect analysis of why and how the parliamentary system but not the presidential system will solve both problems and roots—people may be herded into signing and eventually voting for Cha-cha, but they will not be fully enlightened on the matter.

A shift to the parliamentary system will only make the ruling party very powerful. Conversely, the minority opposition party will be so weakened that the principle of checks and balances will be greatly undermined. And removing the term limits will perpetuate the majority party's hold on power.

It does not follow that because the parliamentary system made other nations progressive, it will do the same for us. There are other major factors that make a nation prosperous, such as the character of its people.

Albano could not have chosen a better example than Thailand's Prime Minister Thaksin, who showed that if the power to dissolve parliament and remove high government officials is vested in a clique of government officials with mutually beneficial relationship, they would not voluntarily oust themselves. Not even people power could boot Thaksin out of office, so the Thai king had to intervene. Even then, after resigning, he bounced back into power—courtesy of the parliamentary system!

'Hiya' and silent majority

I CLEARLY REMEMBER THE COMMERCIALS of the Development Bank of the Philippines when I was in college, sometime in the late 1980s. One of them featured a man extolling two virtues that we Filipinos seemed to have forgotten. "Buhay natin ang delicadeza; buhay natin ang palabra de honor." (Let's have delicadeza and word of honor again.) Thus were these two virtues ingrained in my mind.

The ad might have seemed corny, spoofed in TV shows and in friendly banter. But it was powerful and timely and timeless.

As an INQUIRER columnist noted in one of his columns, 'hiya' is very similar to—or, maybe, it even encompasses—these two traits, and "amor proprio."

These must be the traits we should look for in our leaders, especially in our President. Clearly, Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo doesn't have these traits. She swore before the grave of Rizal not to run for president in 2004, but she ran anyway. That clearly showed lack of palabra de honor.

Calling a Comelec official during the canvassing of ballots is not just a lapse in judgment, it's lack of delicadeza, it's illegal, it's unlawful. You don't know your laws, you don't deserve to be president. You don't get the votes, you shouldn't be sitting in Malacañang pretending to be president, and a bad one at that.

It irks me when people present themselves as members of the silent majority, then exhort us to let bygones be bygones and just let GMA reign. Last I checked, the majority wants GMA out. Maybe they should qualify themselves as the silent majority of the minority who supports GMA. The noisy minority of this minority being Michael Defensor, Raul Gonzalez, Jose de Venecia and their ilk.

There are 80 million Filipinos. For sure, there is one Filipino who can lead us better than she does. At the rate she's going, even a monkey can do a better job as president.

Other people worry so much about the opposition—the trapos in particular, the Estradas and Marcoses and their minions wanting to do a comeback performance. But these are not the only people comprising the opposition. The majority of Filipinos are the opposition, the true silent majority. The ones mentioned above are the noisy minority of the majority. They are no different from Ms Arroyo. We don't want them, we don't support them.

History is about our story, the story of the common tao, the true majority. We make history, we choose our future and we can do something about it. Let us straighten our priorities.

Bring back the sense of hiya into our culture, into our government, into our lives. Throw out the "walanghiya" in the government, unmask those in the opposition. Let's start with the biggest one in Malacañang.

forces to respect the law in hunting down rebels.

"My government wants to strengthen democracy and I hope people will understand that the President is against dictatorships," Ms Arroyo said.

"I aim to maintain stability and uphold the freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution," Ms Arroyo said in a phone-patch interview with dzMM radio.

The President said she had ordered the police, military and the Department of Justice to take immediate steps to put a stop to the killings.

In the case of slain journalists, she said that the authorities had pinpointed and filed cases against some of the killers.

"There had been many arrests and in some cases, there are tracker teams now hunting down other suspects," she said in Filipino.

"Whether they are in the media, militant groups or they are just ordinary citizens, these crimes should be given resolution," she said.

An INQUIRER tally showed at least 228 activists have been killed around the country since Ms Arroyo assumed office in 2001.

Leftist leaders accused her administration of being behind the killing and abduction of activists.

Use judicial process

In the strongest statement to date from a top government official on the spate of human rights abuses being blamed on the military, Defense Secretary Avelino Cruz Jr said government forces should respect the "judicial process" in dealing with suspected rebels.

Death penalty is dead

The abolition would seem to serve as a good send-off gift for Ms Arroyo, who is to go on a foreign trip from June 23 to July 2.

Palace sources said Ms Arroyo would visit Libya, then go to Rome and the Vatican for an expected audience with the Pontiff, before proceeding to Spain.

In April, Ms Arroyo said she would commute death sentences to life imprisonment, drawing mixed reactions from crime victims and death penalty opponents—and flak from critics, who said she was only after support from the Catholic Church.

Anticrime watchdogs, which had warned that the abolition of capital punishment would only encourage criminals, immediately denounced the congressional action.

'Voice of victims'

"This bill is being railroaded like a bullet train," said Dante Jimenez, founding chair of the Volunteers Against Crime and Corruption. "This is being railroaded so when the President goes to Europe she can tell (Europeans) that the Philippines no longer has this law."

Jimenez also said: "We were never invited by Congress nor by Malacañang. They are afraid to hear the voices of the victims ... Why weaken the law? If you weaken the law you strengthen the criminals."

The country's Roman Catholic Church leaders also appeared to welcome Congress' move.

Asked for reaction, the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines' media office referred reporters to an earlier statement by CBCP president Angel Lagdameo that the Church was convinced that the death penalty had not served its purpose since criminality and corruption were still rampant.

The CBCP had welcomed previous actions by both the executive and legislative branches toward abolishing the death penalty as a "humanitarian act."

Sen. Joker Arroyo, chair of the Senate committee on justice and human rights, said senators crossed party lines to approve the measure.

Ms Arroyo had written Senate President Franklin Drilon certifying the abolition bill as urgent. Her certification paved the way for the bill's approval on third reading.

Sen. Jinggoy Ejercito Estrada cast the lone abstention.

13TH CABINET meeting as well as that of the board of the National Anti-Poverty Council and National Economic Development Authority is held at the Palace with President Arroyo presiding. LYN RILLON

Cruz, however, stopped short of censuring the military as well as the police for the killing and abduction of militants.

"We've been telling the (Cabinet) security cluster it's important to gather evidence, file charges against people conducting armed rebellion against the government, arrest them and put them in jail," Cruz said.

"I have said this over and over again, the decision has to be facts-based and evidence-based," said Cruz.

"Use the judicial process. That's the right way to do it under a democratic form of government," he stressed.

Previously, government and military officials had dismissed allegations of military and police involvement in the killings as leftist propaganda and said the murderers were part of internal purges within the rebel ranks.

Joint cooperation

Cruz said he had been discussing with Interior Secretary Ronaldo Puno how they could revive an executive order that calls for cooperation between military and police forces in urban areas in effecting arrests.

"Hopefully, we can come up with an agreement between the DND and the DILG so there will be a joint directive to the AFP and the PNP to remind them to reinforce (the directive) that they should arrest people with warrants," Cruz said.

Communist hit list?

Asked if he was just issuing a reminder to government troops against conducting warrantless arrests, Cruz replied: "No, (we want) to revitalize the coordination, especially in the urban areas."

The seeming propaganda war that the killings had sparked took another turn yesterday when a letter was circulated around Malacañang claiming that the Communist Party of the Philippines had marked Ms Arroyo and 15 Cabinet officials and allies for liquidation.

Reporters covering the Palace each got a letter dated March 29, the 37th anniversary of the CPP, from the "Kawanihan sa Impormasyon Partido Komunista ng Pilipinas."

The letter said that the "Bagong Hukbong Bayan" had come up with a list of "reactionary politicians" and "enemies of the country."

The targets

"The following will be liquidated by (the group)," it said in Filipino.

It listed 16 people, including the President, Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez, Presidential Chief of Staff Michael Defensor, National Security Adviser Norberto Gonzales, Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita, Rep. Constantino Jaraula, Interior Secretary Ronaldo Puno, Commission on Elections Chair Benjamin Abalos, Sen. Miriam Santiago, Rep. Imee Marcos, Samar Gov. Ben Evarrone, Speaker Jose de Venecia, Public Works Secretary Hermogenes Ebane, Rep. Prospero Nograles, Rep. Luis Villafuerte and Press Secretary and presidential spokesperson Ignacio Bunye.

Asked to comment on his inclusion on the alleged hit list, Bunye said: "These threats have not deterred me from performing my duty. I will continue to perform my duties the best way I can and the best way I know how."

Police detain suspect

THE POLICE IN PANGASINAN, said they had arrested a suspect in the May 16 killing of Jose Doton, secretary general of the Bagong Alyansang Makabayan (Bayan).

Senior Supt. Alan Purisima, provincial police director, identified the suspect as Joel Flores, 28, in a press conference held five days after his arrest.

Doton, 62, and his brother Cancio, 57, were on a motorcycle on their way home to Barangay Caboloan in San Nicolas town when two men on a motorcycle fired at them. Doton died instantly while Cancio was wounded.

Purisima said police started conducting surveillance operations on Flores, of Asingan town, when a check with the Land Transportation Office's records showed that he owned the motorcycle used by the two suspects.

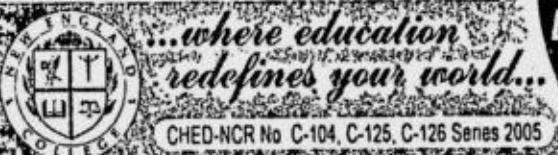

Reports said Flores learned about the surveillance and poked his gun at policemen on June 1. This prompted the police to arrest him.

Purisima said Flores's gun was checked to find out if its shells matched the empty shells recovered from the scene where Doton was attacked.

The test showed that the six empty shells came from Flores's firearm, Purisima said.

OFFICIALS OF PAMPANGA TOLD HOUSE INVESTIGATORS THEY lost original copies of receipts that could provide clues on how taxes from quarrying in lahar areas in the province were being stolen.

The documents, officials said, could explain the "drastic drop" in quarry revenues when Sen. Manuel "Lito" Lapid was Pampanga governor.

The officials made the admission when the House committee on good government, chaired by Iloilo Rep. Arthur Defensor, resumed the hearings on Tuesday, or after more than a year of lull since May 18, 2005.

Provincial administrator Fidel Arcenas reported that the gratuitous permits issued by Lapid were missing as he read an affidavit by Regina Vitug, the environment and natural resources officer of the Pampanga government.

The permits allowed local authorities and contractors, like the China Waters, to extract and haul sand without paying taxes.

The Chinese company alone got 20,000 truckloads worth P6 million for its project to strengthen the tail dike of the FVR Megadike in Bacolor, according to the late provincial administrator Benalfe Galang when he faced the committee last year.

In the same affidavit, Vitug said she submitted the original copies to Galang. She said she failed to retrieve these before the official died on Oct. 17, 2005.

Defensor said Vitug faces charges of infidelity in the custody of public documents.

He also summoned the presence of Vitug in the next hearing in August. The same summon would be issued to provincial treasurer Vergel Yabut who was supposed to submit the copies of all gratuitous permits issued by Lapid from 1991 to 2001 and from 2002 to 2004, the former governor's last term.

Monday's hearing continued to focus on the causes of the "discrepancy" of P337 million between the collections of the state-owned Natural Resources Development Corp. and the provincial quarry task force from 1999 to 2001 and 2002 to 2004.

Aside from giving sand at no cost, Galang had also attributed the disparity to the corruption by some checkers and the drop in the demand by the construction industry.

Iloilo Rep. Rolex Suplico earlier pursued the issue of alleged illegal issuance of gratuitous permits as possible basis for graft charges against Lapid.

Vice Gov. Joseller Guiao told the committee that those permits were issued without approval from the provincial board.

But Galang, in his past testimony, had defended Lapid, saying the provincial tax ordinance granted the former governor that power.

Gov. Mark Lapid, the senator's son, did not attend the hearing on Tuesday.

Defensor ordered the committee to seek an explanation from the Commission on Audit on why the agency turned down at least five requests of Guiao to conduct a special audit on the finances of the provincial government.

Kanlaon acts up; warning raised

BACOLOD CITY—MOUNTAIN CLIMBERS and other trekkers have been advised to defer any planned climbs at the Mt. Kanlaon park area until further notice after Mt. Kanlaon emitted smoke over the weekend.

The Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology (Phivolcs), in an advisory released Monday, also reminded people that the four-kilometer permanent danger zone of Kanlaon Volcano on Negros Island remained off limits to the public, particularly at this time when sudden ash and steam explosions might occur anytime.

Kanlaon Volcano briefly emitted steam and ash Saturday afternoon but the Phivolcs has not raised any alert level yet, the Provincial Disaster Management Team of Negros Occidental said yesterday.

The Phivolcs advisory said that at 2:30 p.m. Saturday, dirty white steam was seen rising at a maximum height of 800 meters before it drifted northwest.

The Phivolcs, however, sought to give assurances that no earthquakes were detected by its seismic station, based in Canlaon City in Negros Oriental.

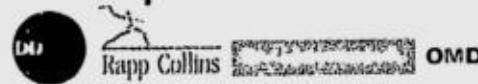

Ash deposits were confined to the upper northwest slope of the volcano, according to the Phivolcs. Carla R. Gomez, PDI Visayas Bureau ILOILO CITY—ILOILO GOV. NIEL Tupas Sr. has joined the Catholic Church here in opposing the entry of Small Town Lottery (STL) into the province.

CAMP OLIVAS, Pampanga—The bodies of two mountaineers who drowned at the Pasig-Potrero River while on their way to Mt. Pinatubo on May 31 were found Sunday, police said. Rescue workers of the Porac municipal government found York de los Santos, 25, and Bjorn Baquiran, 24, at the river's downstream section at Sitio Catusig in Barangay Inarao, also in Porac. De Los Santos, a native of Cardona town in Rizal, and Baquiran, of Valenzuela City in Metro Manila, were members of the Mountaineering Federation of the Philippines, according to the police. Together with 24 others, they climbed the 1,400-foot high volcano via the Apo Namalyari route, where the river drains out but strong waves due to heavy rains swept the two victims at about 3 p.m. on May 31, police said. Tonette Orellas, PDI Central Luzon Desk

Forest guard found dead

BACOLOD CITY—A volunteer forest guard was found dead on Saturday morning, a few meters from a river in Barangay Igmay-an, Don Salvador Benedicto town, Negros Occidental. The body of Bantay Bukid member Jose Laureto Fuentes, 48, bore hack, stab and slash wounds in the neck, head, arms and wrists, said town police chief Senior Insp. Leonardo Angcon. Fuentes, a resident of Purok Logdeck, Barangay Igmay-an, was into the money lending business and was last seen by his neighbors on Friday, attending a seminar at the DSB Multi-Purpose Hall, Angcon said. Police said the victim's two wallets and his cellular phone were missing. Angcon said they believed that the suspects robbed Fuentes first and then killed him when he resisted. The killers also took the victim's bolo.

DAVAO CITY—Members of the Federation of Upland Banana Growers, Inc. here protested the rejection by the Davao Fruits Corp. of their demand to amend production and sales agreements. Virgilio Lago, a federation official, said they would go to court if Davao Fruits continued to ignore their demands. "The company has continued to thumb down the federation's appeal for price adjustments for almost two years now," Lago said. He said the contract growers have been seeking price adjustments because of the rising cost of production. The federation, which has 800 members including lumad, maintains a 300-hectare banana plantation in six villages. Lago said the company pays them $2 per box of 13.5 kilograms but this could hardly compensate for their expenses. He said his group wants an increase of 50 cents per box.

He said his son decided to stop the van to take the victim to the hospital but the soldiers grabbed the two inside the van and stabbed them several times.

ILAGAN, ISABELA—THE PARTNERSHIP being worked out between the island-state of Hawaii in the United States and Isabela province is expected to boost the hiring of nurses from this province and the improvement of the quality of nursing education here, officials said.

Hawaii Rep. Dennis Arakaki, who was in the country last week for a 13-day official visit, said the employment of Isabela's nurses was just one of the "promising potentials" that the two governments could establish through a sisterhood pact expected to be signed this year.

"We have a very critical shortage of nurses in the state of Hawaii ... (and) we also know that the Philippines provides a large number of Filipino nurses. This is one area we want to develop because you have a resource that we could use," Arakaki told provincial officials here last week.

Bridge

Arakaki visited the province and submitted to Vice Gov. Ramon Reyes, the acting governor, a copy of the House Concurrent Resolution 230 of Hawaii's 23rd Legislature, which approved the signing of an agreement between Isabela and the US state.

"The sister-state relationship would reinforce and cement [a] common bridge for understanding and mutual assistance between ethnic Filipinos of both the State of Hawaii and the province of Isabela, known as the 'Rice Granary of the North,'" the resolution read.

Arakaki said the partnership would also look into means of improving the quality of nursing education in the province, "so that the nurses who do come to Hawaii will be trained and qualified."

Hawaii concerns

Other areas of collaboration include business, trade, industry, sports, health care, social welfare and tourism, which, Arakaki said, is "one of Hawaii's forte."

Isabelinos there will have a stronger voice, and the government of Hawaii will have an easier and more effective way to serve them," Padaca said in a statement sent from the United States, where she is on a study tour.

Padaca said the idea of the sisterhood pact came up when she visited Hawaii and met with members of their House of Representatives in November last year.

Board support

The following month, the Isabela provincial board passed a resolution that authorized Padaca, on behalf of the Isabela government, to enter into a sisterhood agreement with Hawaii.

Padaca submitted the board resolution to Hawaii Gov. Linda Lingle during the Hawaii governor's visit to the country in January.

On April 13, the Hawaiian government complemented the Isabela board's resolution with the approval of House Resolution 230. Melvin Gascon, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

BACOLOD CITY—THE SHORTAGE of teachers and classrooms in Negros Occidental and Bacolod City is minimal, education officials said as thousands of students returned to school Monday.

Unlike in other public schools in the country, the student population in public elementary and high schools in Negros Occidental has actually been dropping over the last five years, according to Dr. Eva Belicena, Negros Occidental schools superintendent.

Belicena attributed the decline in enrollment in the past five years to economic difficulties and to the fact that the Department of Education (DepEd) is now strictly enforcing a rule that if a pupil's grades did not meet the passing rate, he or she could not move on to the next grade, which may have discouraged some from returning to school.

Declining population

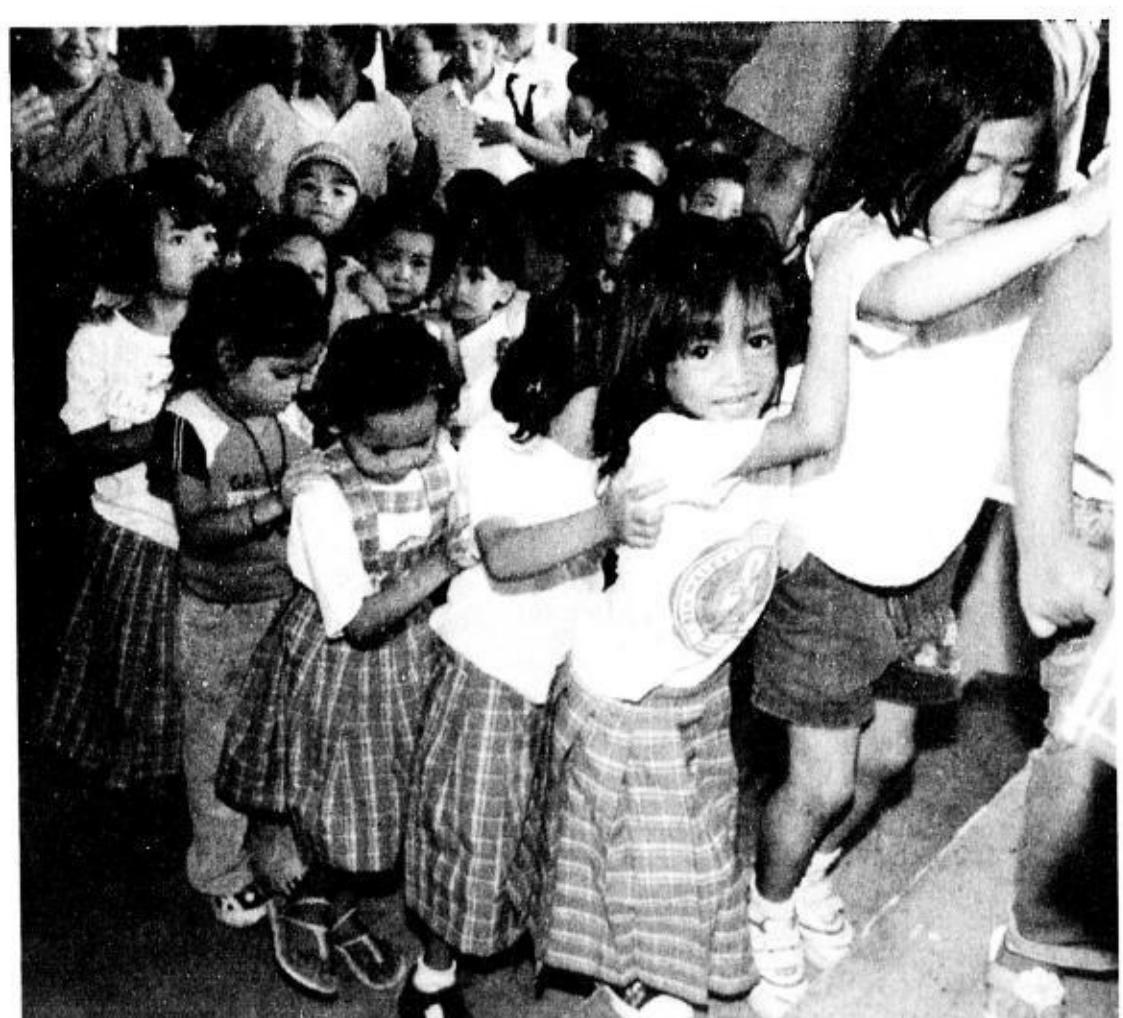

In 2002, elementary school enrollment in Negros Occidental was 236,000. It dropped to 233,000 in 2003, 230,000 in 2004 and 223,000 in 2005, she said.

High school enrollment was 90,169 in 2002, 92,865 in 2003, 93,522 in 2004 and 91,297 in 2005, she said.

On the state of classrooms in public schools in Negros Occidental, Belicena said that while on paper there are more classrooms than the existing number of classes, some are makeshift and run down and need to be repaired or replaced.

In the elementary level there are 6,026 classes and 6,637 instructional rooms and 1,172 non-instructional rooms, she said.

In the high school level there are 1,813 classes with 1,931 instructional rooms and 348 non-instructional rooms, Belicena added.

As to teacher shortage, Belicena said about 30 more are needed in the elementary level and 50 for high school, which is minimal compared to other parts of the country.

Dr. Milagros Gonzales, Bacolod schools division superintendent, said the lack of school teachers in public elementary and high schools was very manageable because the lack of school teachers in public elementary and high schools was very manageable because Mayor Evelio Leonardi has been allocating funds for teaching aides to augment the year.

DepEd workforce.

She also said the lack of classrooms is only being felt at the Isla and Cabugason elementary schools.

No land

At Isla, she said, the difficulty is the lack of land area to build more classrooms, while at Cabugason the new school there already has four classrooms and more are under construction so the shortage will be addressed by next school year.

To decongest public schools, the DepEd is also providing education vouchers for students to go to private schools, but school officials said there are few takers.

The vouchers are for P4,000 a school year, which is not enough to pay for tuition in private schools so parents opt to keep their children in public schools, Belicena said.

She said the provincial schools division has 1,500 voucher slots.

In Bacolod City, Gonzales said they have a little more than 100 voucher slots but, like those in the province, there were also few takers.

CHR to probe abuse of 5 farmers tagged NPA rebels

CAMP VICENTE LIM, LAGUNA—The Commission on Human Rights is investigating the arrest and detention of five farmers in Tagaytay City who have been accused of being communist guerrillas.

Two CHR investigators visited the "Tagaytay 5" at their detention cell here yesterday to get their account of their April 28, 2006 arrest.

Aristedes Sarmiento, Axel Alexander Pippin, Rico Ybañez, Michael Masayes and Riel Custodio were held by intelligence agents of the Cavite police and the Philippine Navy for supposedly plotting to overthrow the government.

May 1 plan

The purported attack, allegedly supported by rightists, would have coincided with Labor Day celebrations on May 1.

The five have been charged with rebellion at the Tagaytay regional trial court.

Nicanor Agustin, CHR investigator, said the probe was prompted by the request of Sarmiento's family and the group's friends and supporters.

He said the CHR would furnish the arresting officers with affidavits of the accused and would request them to submit counter-affidavits.

He said it could take a week before the commission issues a decision to start a formal inquiry.

The five said they welcome the role of the CHR in the investigation of their case.

"Hopefully, the CHR can help us unmask the abusive characters of our arresting officers and (the) Gestapo-style arrest they did on us. The human rights violations are very glaring in this case," Pippin told the INQUIRER.

Torture

The five earlier claimed they were physically and mentally tortured by their police and military captors.

Lawyers of Sarmiento, Pippin and Custodio have asked the court to dismiss the rebellion case against their clients and order their immediate release.

Veteran human rights lawyer and former Sen. Wigberto Taftada and lawyer Jose Manuel Diokno filed a motion to dismiss the case at the sala of Judge Edwin Larida, citing no probable cause.

They argued that despite the statement of the arresting officers that a gun and explosive materials were seized from the group, police had failed to issue a receipt that the items were recovered from them. Marlon Ramos, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

Abused OFW decides to fight back, sue

PAGADIAN CITY—A FILIPINO maid is suing her former employer and recruiters for abuses that, she said, she suffered while working in Lebanon.

Virginia Bonbon, provincial labor officer, said the Department of Labor and Employment was helping the victim file charges against her former employer and at least three agencies who brought her to Lebanon.

Bonbon said the victim arrived in Lebanon in August and since then, suffered from abuses in the hands of her employers. She could not identify the employers.

The victim refuses to talk with men as a result of her traumatic experiences, said Bonbon.

She said the victim had asked Lolita Dumaboc, a neighbor, to speak on her behalf.

Dumaboc said Lara arrived in Manila from Lebanon on Feb. 25. She said a staff member from Blue Bay Employment Service fetched her at the Ninoy Aquino International Airport. She was made to stay at its office.

"The relatives only knew about her arrival when an applicant from Pagadian recognized her and contacted her relatives," Dumaboc told the INQUIRER.

Dumaboc said the family immediately sought help from the Public Employment Service Office (Peso).

The Peso contacted Non-Stop Overseas Employment Corp., the Manila-based agency that originally recruited Lara.

Dumaboc said a brother of Lara flew to Manila and, on Feb. 27, she was brought to a psychiatry ward at the Philippine General Hospital. She stayed there until March 20.

Dumaboc said a medical certificate issued by the PGH showed that Lara was diagnosed with brief psychotic disorder and had suffered a miscarriage.

Licel Trinidad, a medical officer at the PGH Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Medicine, said in Lara's medical record that she was "nonconversant, refused to eat, and had difficulty sleeping."

"Workouts were done and a pregnancy test showed positive results," said Trinidad in her medical report.

She said Lara's psychotic disorder could be the result of "sexual abuse and geographical separation from family."

Baina Abas-Flores of the Kaagapay Overseas Filipino Workers Resource and Service Center said that Lara had told them her male employer first sexually abused her while she was cooking.

After that, her female employer started beating her.

Then one day, her employers brought her out without telling where they were going.

Flores said Lara later learned she was being brought to the office of Diana Service Agency, her principal employer in Lebanon. Her Lebanese employers left her there.

Flores said the next day, she was handed her passport, an air ticket and $100. She was made to drink water.

Lara was accompanied to the airport by an unidentified Filipina.

"She told me that after drinking water, she lost track of the events. The victim was unconscious until she arrived in Manila on Feb. 25," Flores told INQUIRER.

Flores said Non-Stop, Diana and another agency, Blue Bay, were included in the charge sheet because they appeared to have connived with the Lebanese employers, who remained unidentified to this day.

She said Non-Stop refused to give the name of the employers.

"They cannot give us the name and instead offered P200,000 for Lara to drop the case against the Lebanese employers and the three agencies," Flores said. Michael Sarcauga, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Army general says MILF camps refuge of JI members

CARMEN, NORTH Cotabato—The Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) is still coddling members of the al-Qaida-linked Jemaah Islamiyah in their camps despite ongoing peace talks with the government, an Army general said.

Maj. Gen. Rodolfo Obaniana, chief of the Army's 6th Infantry Division, said about 30 Indonesian JI militants were hiding in MILF camps in Mindanao.

The MILF vehemently denied the accusation.

"It's difficult for us to launch offensives against them because they are protected by these rebels. We are avoiding as much as possible a misencounter between soldiers and the rebels," Obaniana said.

"Our latest count of JIs in Mindanao is 30. Ten of them are in Central Mindanao," he added.

Obaniana did not mention if the leaders of the 30 JIs are Dulmatin and Omar Patek, who have bounties on their heads set by the US State Department.

Fighting to unite most of Southeast Asia into an Islamic state, the JI is blamed for several deadly attacks, including bombings in Bali, Indonesia in 2002 that killed 202 people.

MILF spokesperson Eid Kabalu told the INQUIRER by phone that the guerrilla organization was revolutionary and that the MILF did not need support from foreign organizations.

"That's not true. In fact, since July last year, there are no JI militants monitored in our areas. If they want to launch operations, they should coordinate with our troops (that has the) task of interdicting terror groups," he said.

Jerry Panaggulon, an MILF commander op-

Panaggulon and at least 44 members of the Moro National Liberation Front-Misuri group, led by Lugem Daud, were accepted by Obaniana in simple ceremonies held at military headquarters here.

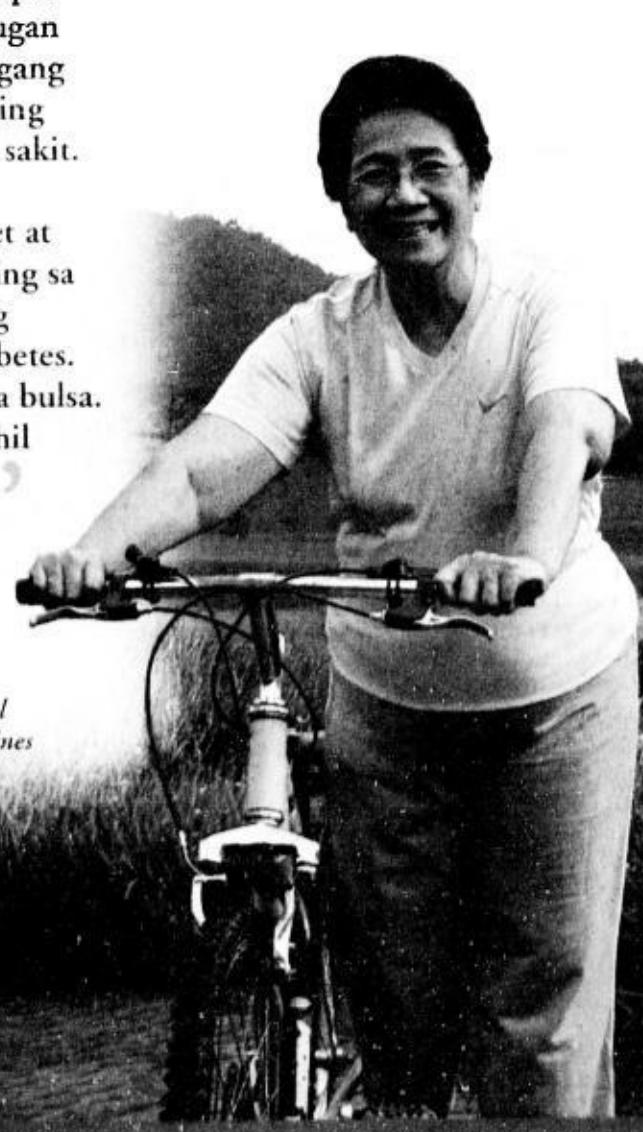

"It shows only that many of them are now for peace and development. They are legitimate rebels ... not recycled," said Col. Ruerto Pabustan, head of the Army's 602nd Infantry Brigade.

"For them to be utilized in safeguarding the peace and order in their respective areas, they will be appointed as civilian volunteers under the supervision of their mayors," he added. Jeffrey Maitem, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Old-timers slam 'uglification' of Baguio

By Shayne Anne Basco, Beverly Castillo and Jahzeel Abihail Cruz
Contributors

THEY GREW UP SMELLING THE familiar scent of pine, experiencing foggy afternoons, and finding comfort in Baguio City's verdant carpet.

Cecile Afable, Leonora San Agustin and Virginia de Guia, now in their 80s and 90s, practically grew up with Baguio and witnessed how its pristine environment was slowly ruined by creeping development.

They are now fighting for a cause that will restore their beloved city, their home, to its glory. Their latest challenge? To stop a flyover project at Baguio's gateway.

This battle, they believe, is worth fighting for, even to their last breath.

The educator

Leonora Paraan San Agustin, 91, recalls her memories of Baguio like they happened only yesterday.

"The smell of pine and the sight of Benguet lilies along Kennon [Road] used to make us excited to go home to Baguio," says San Agustin, curator of the Baguio-Benguet Museum.

San Agustin graduated valedictorian at the Baguio City National High School and finished chemical engineering at the old Adamson School of Engineering in Manila to become the first woman chemical engineer in the country.

She found herself going back to her roots in Baguio. She taught English, Chemistry and Geology for 45 years at the Baguio Colleges Foundation (now the University of the Cordilleras).

"I had to go home to Baguio, and I literally became the labandera (laundrywoman) of my family," says San Agustin.

She never forgot to give back to her city. Aside from founding various women's organizations, such as the Young Women's Christian Association (YWCA) and the Lioness Club, she pursued projects to preserve Baguio's natural beauty.

"I've been fighting for the city for 15 years on a crusade to safeguard Baguio's ambiance and allure," she says.

The proposed flyover stretching over the Baguio General Hospital and Medical Center rotunda, she says, will "ugly" Baguio, one of the top tourist destinations in the country.

She is puzzled why the Department of Public Works and Highways insists on a project that many people are opposing.

Should the construction pushes through, the felled trees, disrupted aquifer and pollution would deteriorate Baguio further, she says.

"I will still work [to protect Baguio] until I py to stay in Baguio. She adores the blue sky and open space.

But like San Agustin and De Guia, Afable thinks that Baguio has changed for the worse. "There are too many houses, more than enough to be supported by the water system," she says.

Among the causes she is advocating are the greening and the protection of the water system of the city. But what occupies most of her time now is opposing another flyover in Baguio.

Issues

These women believe that people who do not care about Baguio have not experienced it the way they have.

"We're fighting because we experienced the beauty, ambiance and good life of Baguio," says San Agustin.

They say the flyover will ruin Baguio's small town appeal and result in the cutting of century-old trees.

"The city does not have the funding. The Commission on Audit now will not give certification that the money is there," says Afable.

Afable said if traffic at the BGHMC rotunda was the problem, a traffic light would be the cheaper and more environment-friendly solution.

San Agustin, De Guia and Afable agree that apathy is their worst enemy.

"If you don't demonstrate against [the flyover], nothing will happen," says Afable.

"The worst crime is not doing anything," San Agustin says.

But the DPWH is determined to push the project despite the opposition of some sectors.

Mariano Alquiza, DPWH regional director, says he is planning to issue another suspension order on the project following the agency's failure to obtain a permit to cut trees from the city government.

"We are studying the possibility of going directly to the DENR [for the permit]," he says.

Mayor Braulio Yaranon has opposed the flyover and says he will not issue the permit to cut trees for the project.

cannot breathe anymore," said San Agustin.

The public servant

De Guia, Baguio's first woman councilor and acting mayor, now leads a quiet life at 90. Yet her role as a public servant has not ended.

"Baguio was a dream city created, formed and planned by the Americans," she says.

But she says like her old photographs, good governance is stuck in time.

De Guia comes from a prominent family in the city. She says she is a natural environmentalist since her father was among the pioneer foresters in the country.

After graduating from the University of the Philippines with a degree in philosophy, De Guia took up law and earned her degree in 1940.

She returned to Baguio and found herself running for office that same year.

"I don't regret taking up law because it was fun and I learned a lot," De Guia says.

Knowledge of the law, she says, helped her make Baguio a well-administered city during her term. "Baguio had a good government, [it was] a very disciplined city," she says.

But politicking and lax law enforcement have deteriorated Baguio, once a model city in the country.

She blames politicians for pushing through with unnecessary projects such as the proposed flyover.

"We are in favor of development, but development must have direction," De Guia says. The project, she believes, may end up unfinished due to lack of funds.

The writer

Afable's house is a museum in its own right. Decorating it are Sung Dynasty jars and one of National Artist Benedicto Cabrera's early paintings. But its most prized possession is still its owner, a small woman bound to big responsibilities.

"When they ask me what organization I belong to, I say I only belong to one, 'Cecile Afable,'" she says.

Afable, 83, is editor in chief of the Baguio Midland Courier, the oldest community newspaper in the city.

Though her four children, now all professionals, chose to settle elsewhere, Afable is hapare issued by the mayor or barangay officials, she said.

The allowable volume of drinks will be limited, based on the capacity of visitors and guests, she added. Local officials are held liable for untoward incidents.

Since Ambaguio's villages are far from one another, Mayor Nueve Manuel has deputized village chiefs to issue permits to merrymakers and festival hosts. They also act as "regulators" to ensure that no untoward incident happens.

Offenders, which may include host families and stores or people who sold the intoxicating drinks, are fined P500 for the first offense; P1,500, second offense;

P2,500, third offense; and confiscation of business permits for continuous offenses.

But Mauricio Banda, 46, village chief of Tiblac, has questioned the ordinance as a regulatory and prohibitory measure.

The law, in its entirety, has regulatory provisions, but one of them has become the subject of discussion because of its discriminatory effect on people's integrity and image, especially men, he said.

Legal experts, who spoke during a recent seminar on the barangay justice system, suggested that the ban on drinking should have the consensus of Ambaguio voters, he said.

She said drinking in most villages had resulted in various domestic problems that tend to destroy the harmonious relationship among Kalanguya families.

The ordinance, which was proposed three years ago, is also supported by women's organizations in other villages, Samonte said.

"In fact, they are now active as our partners in the implementation of this ordinance," she said.

Local officials have expressed relief that with the ordinance, their efforts could now be focused on other development projects, instead of resolving drinking-related incidents.

Cultural practice

The ordinance does not go against the production of tapuy as part of the cultural practice among the Kalanguya, Samonte said.

What your cellphone says about your personality

by Grace Shangkuan Koo, Ph. D.

Some like it hot; some like it icy. Some like both. Flashy mobiles or nondescript two-featured models? Are cellphones still considered status symbols? Certainly not for newspaper vendors in Hong Kong! Some users are talkative; while others simply reply with a forlorn "k". My ringing tone is a Chopin etude; my husband's, the traditional "krr-ring!" For the neurotic, everything is an emergency; while the lethargic feel everything can wait. The sentimental fellows find everything picture-worthy; the self-conscious ones refuse to be caught on camera. Some delete the messages as soon as they are received; others keep them in the inbox to reminisce. While some settle for basic phone functions, others, especially the younger ones go for cutting edge technology.

With Globe Gizmo Prepaid, kids are spared this dilemma through special features tailor-fit for youngsters aged seven to twelve, like the exclusive Gizmobits trivia service and other learning tools.

Cellphones have made it easier for people to keep in touch with each other. For busy working parents, it's a convenient way of monitoring their kids. Especially with Globe Gizmo's Emergency Text and Low Load Alert – these child-friendly services ensure constant communication between parent and child. Frequent cellphone use made "txt speling" popular as well. Poor spellers have found the best ally and alibi for wrong spelling. Grammarians, on the other hand, can't stand the warped language – kids won't find this a problem, with Globe Gizmo's Dictionary and Thesaurus functions.

Whether you're a kid or a grownup don't forget proper phone etiquette. Keep your phone switched off or on silent mode while at the movies or attending important functions. Courtesy is always appreciated. A simple greeting at the start of every message can brighten anyone's day. Talking loudly on the phone is a no-no! Remember that there are other people in the room, and you might be disturbing them as well. Practice proper phone habits so your children turn to be responsible cellphone users.

An exemplary teacher, voracious reader, and classical music advocate, Dr. Grace Koo shared her parenting and education expertise with the Gizmo Advisory Board (GAB), an advocacy group promoting responsible mobile connectivity for the youth. Convened by Globe Gizmo Prepaid – the country's first prepaid mobile service for kids – GAB has worked with the brand in developing interactive learning experiences and appropriate connectivity options for youngsters aged seven to twelve.

One of the GAB's flagship projects was the development of Gizmobits, a FREE educational service offering daily fun facts in four different areas. MYMIND has study tips and helpful facts from science and other subjects; MYWORLD introduces kids to diverse sights and traditions here and abroad;

MYCONNECTIONS teaches kids how to connect with themselves, with others, and with God; while MYBODY is all about proper hygiene, nutrition, and fitness. Your child can avail of this free service if they are using a Globe Gizmo SIM. Your child just needs to text GIZMOBITS to 2811 to access the educational tips mentioned above.

'Gutsy educator' wanted at DepEd

A MILITANT STUDENT GROUP HAS CALLED ON MALACAÑANG TO appoint a "gutsy educator" as permanent head of the Department of Education, saying the long delay in the appointment of a secretary has serious repercussions for the country's education system.

"The lack of a permanent DepEd secretary can be a hindrance to the agency's long-term plans," said Kabataan Party vice president Carl Marc Ramota.

President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday ordered the military to build makeshift classrooms to ease an acute shortage.

"Education is a flagship concern of this administration," the President said in a statement.

"We will not stop until we can deliver all available resources to build more classrooms led by competent teachers, and with better books, facilities and modern tools of learning," she said.

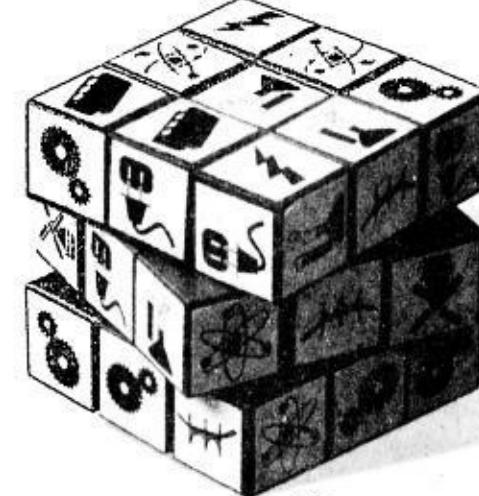

On Monday, as 20 million students began the school year, Ms Arroyo acknowledged that there were "perennial problems" in the education system.

Many children were crammed into gymnasiums, open spaces and even toilets on the first day of classes, reports said.

Noting that it has been almost a year since Florencio Abad resigned as DepEd chief, Ramota said the delay "only [showed] Arroyo's regard for education and her government's insincerity to promote quality education and competitiveness for young Filipinos."

"The way she has handled this issue and how she has treated DepEd officer in charge (OIC) Fe Hidalgo and former Undersecretary Miguel Luz show how Arroyo acts toward officials who differ with her position and how she regards education," Ramota said.

He said that the new education chief must be a "gutsy educator" that would push for a higher education budget and must be willing to review "ambiguous policies." Alcuin Papa and AFP

Blast rocks Makati building Planholders, firm feud eyed

A BOMB WENT OFF IN FRONT OF THE Great Pacific Life Assurance Corp. (Grepalife) building on Gil Puyat Avenue, Makati City, at around 2:50 a.m. yesterday.

No one was hurt in the incident although the blast shattered glass panels on the first floor where the office of Lifetime Plans, a division of pre-needed firm Pacific Plans Inc. (PPI), is located.

"Right now, it's premature to point to any group as responsible for the attack but one angle being looked into is the rift between Pacific and its planholders," said Senior Supt. Samuel Pagdilao Jr., the spokesperson of the Philippine National Police.

"That's the strongest angle so far," he said, adding that the Yuchengcos, owner of the insurance firm, were fully cooperating with police investigators.

PPI planholders have been pursuing claims with the firm. The PPI, on the other hand, had sought remedy from the court, saying it was unable to pay the claims because of tuition increases. A group at the forefront of the fight, the Parents Enabling Parents (PEP) Coalition, subsequently sued the Yuchengco-owned PPI because of unpaid plans. In turn, PPI sued for libel some of the PEP leaders.

PEP Coalition president Philip Piccio, however, denied that the group was behind the bombing. "They can quickly point to planholders but we can also say that the blast may have come from them to gain sympathy, of which they have none anymore. It's easy to guess who I'm referring to," Piccio said.

He added: "There are limits to actions we can do and we do not countenance such things. That's why we went to the courts."

Business as usual

PPI spokesperson Felix Desiderio, meanwhile, said it was business as usual. "We believe that the bombing is merely part of an orchestrated attack against PPI to scare us and prevent us from defending ourselves and availing of the remedies available under the law," Desiderio added.

Officials from the Makati Police Special Weapons and Tactics and the PNP Bomb Disposal Center said the improvised explosive device (IED) was a pillbox, based on the remnants of the bomb recovered from the scene.

Pagdilao said it was unlikely that terrorists were behind the attack because of the type of explosive used and the manner in which the attack was carried out.

Justice

SPD director Wilfredo Garcia, meanwhile, had another theory. "Maybe, a rightist or leftist group is trying to exact justice for planholders," he said.

Makati police chief, Senior Supt. Marietto Valerio, had the same view. "Maybe supporters of the planholders or people who feel like they have been too oppressed had connections with leftist or rightist groups and told them about their grievances," Valerio said.

At the same time, he downplayed the claim made by a group called Kawa at Taong Bayan that they were behind the incident. "I haven't heard of this group. Maybe they are just taking advantage of the situation," said Valerio.

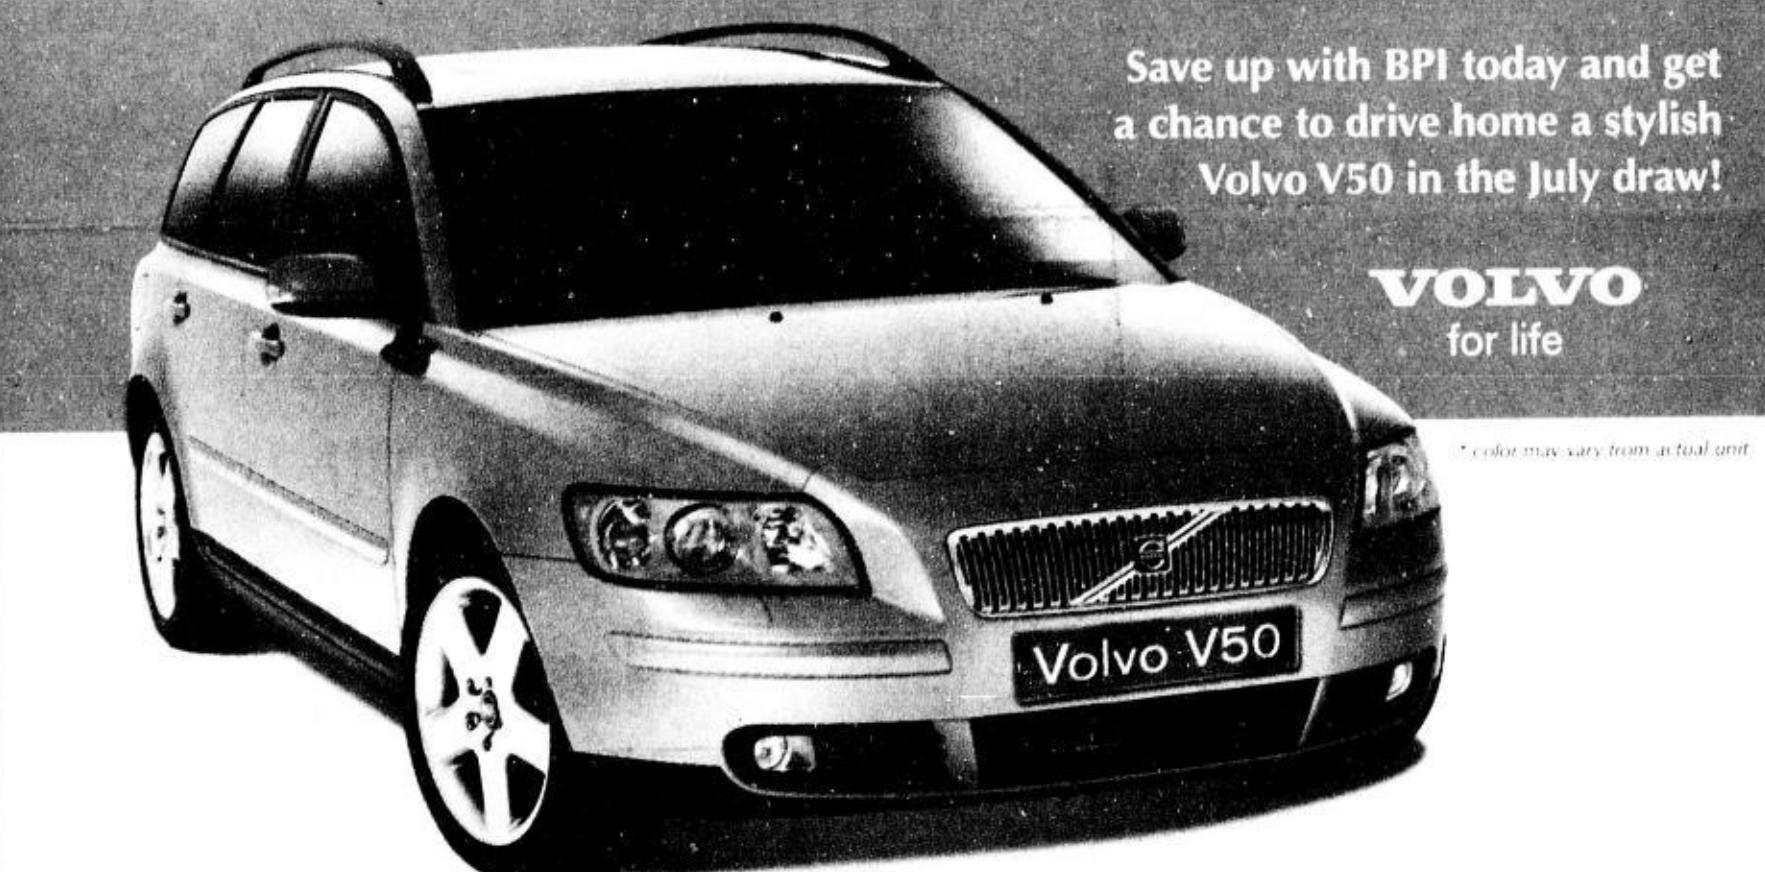

THE IMPACT shattered glass panels at the ground floor of the Grepalife building.

STUDENT PROTEST

THOUSANDS of Chilean students march during a massive protest rally June 5 along the streets of Valparaiso, to demand education reforms.

OTTAWA—MORE ARRESTS WERE EXPECTED following the detention of 17 people over an alleged al-Qaida-inspired plot to bomb high profile targets in Canada, a top police official said Monday.

Amid media reports that the Canadian parliament was on the group's hitlist, Mike McDonell, assistant commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP), said: "This investigation is not finished." "We will be following every investigative lead we have to its conclusion and anybody that aided, facilitated, or participated in this terrorist event will be arrested and brought to the courts," McDonell told CBC public television.

Twelve men and five youths detained in Ontario province on Friday and Saturday would appear in court Tuesday to face charges over an alleged plan to stage a series of spectacular bomb attacks, officials said.

Police have refused to say what the targets were.

But media reports suggested the group had videotaped the CN Tower in Toronto, one of the world's tallest structures, and planned to hit Canada's parliament in Ottawa and intelligence service offices in Toronto, as well as the Toronto Stock Exchange.

The group had acquired three tons of ammonium nitrate, a fertilizer ingredient that can be mixed with fuel to create explosive devices, police said.

The amount is three times what was used in the 1995 bombing of a US federal building in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, that killed 168 people.

"It was their intent to use it for a terrorist attack," McDonell said. But police raids on what media said were a dozen locations prevented them from assembling bombs, he said.

"This group posed a real and serious threat. It had the capacity and intent to carry out these acts," he noted.

Media reports said the group was detained in a sting operation after the RCMP itself delivered the fertilizer just before the raids.

Toronto police chief Bill Blair said the accused were not motivated by their Muslim faith, seeking to allay fears of an anti-Muslim backlash after vandals broke windows at a mosque late Saturday.

But some local Muslim community representatives said the charges would be proved false. "This is an attack on the Muslim community," Aly Hindy, an imam, had told reporters Saturday.

Some community representatives questioned the timing of the arrests, less than a week after Jack Hooper, deputy director of operations at Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), warned Canada faced a growing threat from "homegrown terrorists," particularly youth upset about the oppression of Muslims worldwide and Canada's combat role in Afghanistan. Gunmen snatch 50 in Baghdad, 11 students gunned down

BAGHDAD—GUNMEN IN COMMANDO UNIFORMS snatched at least 50 people from travel agencies in central Baghdad on Monday in an apparent kidnapping, as 11 students were shot dead elsewhere in the Iraqi capital.

The commander of the police commandos in Baghdad, Maj. Gen. Rashid Fulayah, contradicted earlier reports that the operation was officially sanctioned.

"The ministry of interior has nothing to do with this arrest and especially not the commando forces and the forces of public order brigades who are not authorized to do such operations," Fulayah told AFP.

Two Syrians were among those taken away.

"They took people away randomly," said one store owner on Salhiya street, convinced it was criminal elements. "They grabbed a father and his two children but left the mother on the street shouting." Witnesses described how two vehicles painted with the distinctive camouflage pattern of the commandos, accompanied by another 10 unmarked pick-up trucks, blocked off the street and began taking people away.

"If they were the government, they would have investigated and asked who the people they took were," said another witness who preferred to remain anonymous.

Unattended small trucks for hauling goods lined the street after their drivers had been taken away.

The raid took about 10 minutes and the police who came to investigate claimed no knowledge of the operation.

The confusion over whether the raid was officially sanctioned or a criminal operation is a reflection of the widespread suspicion people in Baghdad have of security forces, some of whom are believed to be infiltrated by militiamen.

A number of other violent operations have been carried out by gunmen in uniforms, which can be easily purchased in the city's markets. AFP

Bush pushes ban on gay marriage

WASHINGTON—US PRESIDENT George W. Bush on Monday pushed for a national ban on homosexual marriage, an election-year effort on an issue dear to his conservative Republican base but unlikely to become law.

With just five months before November legislative elections that are expected to be dominated by issues like the war in Iraq, Bush called for a constitutional amendment defining marriage as solely between a man and a woman.

"I call on the Congress to pass this amendment, send it to the states for ratification so we can take this issue out of the hands of over-reaching judges and put it back where it belongs—in the hands of the American people," he said.

Bush again targeted what he called "activist judges" who have struck down laws restricting marriage to a union between a man and a woman in the states of Washington, California, Maryland, New York and Nebraska.

"It's an important issue for our country to debate and to resolve. And the best way to resolve this issue is through a constitutional amendment, which I strongly support," said the president.

A constitutional amendment is unlikely because it must garner two-thirds majorities in the Senate and House of Representatives—Bush's Republicans lack the votes—and then win passage from three-fourths of the 50 US states.

But with Bush's approval ratings at dismal levels, experts say Republicans need to muster as many of their conservative faithful as possible to prevent heavy losses in the US Congress. AFP

Abbas to call referendum after talks fail

RAMALLAH—PALESTINIAN leader Mahmud Abbas was set Tuesday to call a referendum on a statehood plan which implicitly recognizes Israel after a deadline passed for a policy agreement between the Hamas-led government and his Fatah faction.

"The president will fix the date for holding this referendum on Tuesday," his office said in a statement, following the failure of last-minute talks late Monday between Palestinian factions in the West Bank town of Ramallah.

Hamas, meanwhile, called for more negotiations even as a midnight deadline set by Abbas passed after 10 days of dialogue. But the Palestinian Authority president was reported to have ruled out any extension. Abbas had set the deadline for Hamas, which routed Fatah in January elections and formed a government, to soften its policy.

The Islamists have defied enormous pressure to accept an initiative drawn up by jailed faction leaders that has been the centerpiece of the cross-party talks. AFP

World powers present nuke incentives to Iran

TEHRAN—A SENIOR EU OFFICIAL ON TUESDAY PRESENTED Iran with proposals from six world powers aimed at persuading Tehran to rein in a nuclear program that the West fears will lead to an atomic bomb.

Iran said it would review the proposals delivered in Tehran by European Union foreign policy chief Javier Solana to Iranian chief nuclear negotiator Ali Larijani.

"We spoke for two hours and they gave their proposals. After reviewing it, Iran will give its answer," Larijani told Iranian reporters after meeting Solana. His comments were later relayed to Reuters.

The package of incentives and penalties, agreed by the world powers, aims to defuse a standoff over Iran's nuclear program.

The West accuses Iran of seeking nuclear weapons but Tehran insists its goals are purely for peaceful, civilian use.

The initiative was put together by the three biggest EU states—Britain, France and Germany—and then approved by the United States, China and Russia.

"The proposal we bring along, the one that we carry, we think that will allow us to get engaged in that negotiation based on trust and respect and confidence," Solana told reporters.

Iran has said it would consider the proposals but officials have also said Iran would not give up uranium enrichment, a process that can be used to make fuel for nuclear power stations or, if enriched to a high enough level, material for bombs.

"If their aim is not politicizing the issue, and if they consider our demand, we can reach a logical agreement with them," Foreign Minister Manouchehr Mottaki told reporters shortly before Solana arrived.

The United States has said Iran's negative comments so far are probably part of efforts to stake out a negotiating position and urged careful consideration by the Islamic Republic, with which it broke off diplomatic ties in 1980.

Mottaki said discussions on the package would require "shuttle diplomacy" and Iran would have suggestions to make—indicating no imminent breakthrough.

Details of the proposals have not been announced, but diplomats have been working on themes ranging from offering nuclear reactor technology to giving security guarantees. Reuters

Bulls take on Gin Kings as q'finals begin

THIS IS THE TIME WHEN teams put everything on the line.

Four teams that took different routes to the playoffs seek a common goal today—getting their quarterfinal bids off to an auspicious start—in the Gran Matador PBA Philippine Cup at the Araneta Coliseum.

Barangay Ginebra, which took the longer route to the quarters by knocking off Air21 in a do-or-die tussle, faces top quarterfinalist Red Bull at the start of the best-of-five affair.

Coca-Cola and Alaska, the other half of the quarterfinal pair, tango in the other match.

The Bulls and the Aces advanced outright to the quarterfinals by finishing third and fourth after the classification round while the Tigers clinched a seat by defeating the Express in a knockout match.

That loss dropped Air21 into a four-team survival round from which Barangay Ginebra emerged the winner.

While the Bulls, Aces and Tigers are coming off long layoffs, the Kings are still fresh from their escape act against the Express.

The injury-plagued Kings turned back the Express in overtime as they relied on the 45-point explosion of Mark Caguioa and the spunkiness of rookie Marc Macapagal in regulation play.

Top Asian karters arriving today

THE BULK OF THE FOREIGN CHALLENGE ARRIVES today for the second leg of the 2006 Asian Karting Open Championship slated June 9-11 at the Carmona Circuit Phils. in Carmona, Cavite. The karters will have practice sessions on Thursday and Friday to adjust their kart setups and to familiarize themselves with the venue of the event sanctioned by the Automobile Association Philippines. Filipinos bagged two of the four major titles at stake in the Manila leg of the event last year courtesy of Matteo Guidicelli, who ruled both the Intercon-A and the Rotax Max Seniors crowns. Indonesia, led by the Haryanto brothers Ryan and Rio, remains the Philippines' biggest rival in the battle for top honors. Hong Kong was the latest to confirm its participation in the races.

GAMES TODAY
(Araneta Coliseum)

4:40 p.m.—Coca-Cola vs Alaska
7:35 p.m.—Red Bull vs Ginebra

"All our games are going to be tough," conceded Ginebra coach Sito Tanquingcen. "Right now, we can hardly match up with anybody."

Hit by injuries, Rommel Adducul, Rodney Santos and Aris Diamauna will continue to stay in the sidelines.

If there's any consolation, though, Andy Seigle was finally reactivated after spending almost the entire conference on the injury list.

With Eric Menk and the 6-foot-9 Seigle on the Ginebra frontline, the Kings are now capable of putting a body on the bulldog Enrico Villanueva and the stealthy Mick Pennisi.

The Aces, their backcourt getting a boost from the midconference acquisition of Willie Miller, are slight favorites in the other series, which features a subplot involving players who feel they still have an ax to grind against their former teams.

John Arigo and Ali Peek were the cornerstones of the Alaska franchise before they were dealt to Coca-Cola for Jeffrey Cariaso and Reynel Hugnatan.

Eagles, Warriors collide in Fr. Martin Cup Final 4

ATENEO AND UNIVERSITY OF THE East took out separate quarterfinal foes recently to arrange a Final Four showdown in the Fr. Martin's Cup-Nike Summer League at the Emilio Aguinaldo College gym in Manila.

The Blue Eagles, a perennial semifinalist in the UAAP, soared over the St. Benilde Blazers, 68-58, behind a strong first half anchored by Chris Tiu, who went on to finish with 19 points.

The rising Warriors, on the other hand, held off a spirited rally by EAC to round out a 65-63 decision as both UAAP squads cross paths in the featured game at 4:30 p.m. today.

But EAC still gained access to the semifinals as a wild card, having the best record by any losing team in the tourney.

The Emilio Aguinaldo cagers clashes with San Sebastian-Cavite dribblers in the other semifinal scheduled at 3 p.m.

The Stags earned a shot at a Finals slot opposite the Generals after tearing Far Eastern U to shreds, 73-49, on Sunday.

Screening tight for new UAAP season

By Jasmine W. Payo

AFTER A SEASON OF SCANDALS, IMPLEMENTING stricter eligibility rules will be among the main agenda of league officials on the 69th edition of the UAAP.

"Life has to go on, we have to make the best that we can out of it even without La Salle," said league president Luiz Sta. Ana of host University of the East at the PSA Forum yesterday at the Pantalan Restaurant in Manila.

"Eligibility (screening) will be stricter than before so we won't have similar problems," added Sta. Ana. "The school themselves, it's also their duty to authenticate (school records)."

La Salle will be serving a one-year suspension in all sports for fielding two ineligible basketball players in the last three seasons.

The university, however, protested the severity of the penalty and sought clarification from league officials last April 27.

"That's already final, we're already preparing for the next season," said Sta. Ana during the public sports program sponsored by Red Bull and Manila Mayor Lito Atienza.

"La Salle is just suspended, but they're still part of the family," said UAAP secretary-treasurer Rolando Perez. "Their school flag will still be there in the opening ceremonies."

Commissioner Elmer Yanga and assistant Atto Badolato also vowed a more effective officiating after several game protests cropped up last year.

"We'll do our best to ensure that there will be fair and just officiating," said Yanga.

BARANGAY Ginebra's Allan Salansang (24), in impressive form lately, is expected to rise to the occasion again.

Bowling future shines in PBC-Boysen tilt

By Marc Anthony Reyes

THE PHILIPPINE YOUTH TEAM, composed of Ditas Red, Marjo Reyes and Holly Josef, put together 1348 pinfalls to upstage its senior counterparts in the Ladies Class O trios of the 35th PBC-Boysen International Open tenpin bowling championships at the Green Valley in Pasig.

Red, a product of the Tenpin Bowling Association of Makati like Reyes, strung up lines of 254 and 277 to lead the trios which kept the more illustrious RP Team 1 at bay.

Liza Clutario, Cecilia Yap and Jojo Cafiare combined for 1304 pinfalls for RP Team 1.

Reyes had 224 and 202, while Josef from the Sta. Lucia stable turned in 248 and 193, to complete the RP Youth's assault in qualifying.

"This is worthy to be noted considering that they beat the big names," said tournament director Archie Perez. "They could be the future of RP bowling."

Clutario, the 2005 Southeast Asian Games masters champ, and Yap, the Asian Games champion, scored 431 and 436, respectively. Cafiare, another SEAG champ, rolled 437 as they placed second.

"I was actually expecting them to overtake us," said Cafiare, the 1997 SEAG champ and currently the doubles leader with Elaine Florencio with 934 pinfalls. Cafiare said Yap was nursing an injured ring finger.

Irene Benitez (417), Apple Posadas (419) and Florencio (397) made up RP Team 2 which pooled 1233 for third place.

Cafiare and Florencio are on the top of the Ladies Class O doubles, pacing fellow RP Team pairs of Kathlynn Lopez and Posadas (887) and Clutario and Yap (866).

Players put pro dreams on hold for PBL finals

By Jasmine W. Payo

FOR THESE TOP AMATEUR CAGERS, THE pro league can wait—at least for a few more weeks.

With their surprise entry in PBL Unity Cup finals, winning the title is still on top of the list for the stars of Toyota Otis and Harbour Centre.

"I'm not thinking about the PBA, I want to finish the PBL finals first," said Harbour Centre point guard LA Tenorio at the PSA Forum yesterday at the Pantalan Restaurant in Manila. "I want to win a championship before turning pro."

Toyota Otis' Fil-Am center Joe Devance, expected to be among the top picks in the PBA rookie draft this August, is similarly focused on the best-of-five championship showdown.

"This is my last conference in the PBL, so I don't want to be left out," said Devance, a standout recruit from the University of Texas-El Paso, during the public sports program sponsored by Pagcor and Manila Mayor Lito Atienza. "I want to win a championship."

"It would be nice (to be the top draft pick), but it doesn't matter as long as I make it."

Even Chico Lanete, the Portmasters' most effective second stringer, knows how winning the title can boost his stock.

"I'm lucky that coach (George Galent) has been giving me the important plays," said Lanete. "You have to show that you deserve to go to the PBA."

Harbour Centre leading scorer Joseph Yeo sees a tight matchup between his own squad, studded as it is with UAAP stars, and an opponent bantered by the core of the 2005 NCAA champions.

"I think it's going to be a long series," said Yeo. "We have the UAAP players, while they have the players of Letran."

Behemoth center Mark Andaya pointed out the Sparks' key advantage. "We have teamwork, we've been together longer," said Andaya.

BARE EYE

Recah Trinidad

(CORRECTION: The email in my previous column which was attributed to American boxing manager Gary Gittelsohn, a big supporter of Manny Pacquiao, ended with the word "extension." The succeeding sentence was merely an editorial remark, included for comic relief. Sorry for the slip. Gittelsohn should be thanked for raising an outcry after Pacquiao was distracted in training by a lawsuit filed by his own manager against a confidante and an adviser in the promotions outfit of the Filipino world boxing celebrity.)

NOBODY IN THIS LAND LOVES SOCCER more than the president of the Philippine Football Federation, Juan Miguel Romualdez.

This unending devotion to the game popularly perceived to have died here decades ago was detailed in a letter by Mr. Romualdez that refuted allegations on the decayed state of football in the Philippines.

Of course, there are other people who care for RP football as much, if not more, as the PFF head does.

Please read what Pocholo Borromeo, president of the National Capital Region Football Association (NCRFA), has sent us:

Dear Sir:
Your PDI article of May 29 entitled, "Soccer: Look Who's Betraying the Filipino Youth" was so timely in coming especially for those of us who are in the forefront of local/provincial football development. Our suffering is heavy and ever-increasing. I am the president of the NCRFA. Most of the strongest teams in the country hail from NCR. We know whereof we speak. We are very close to many of the Football Associations all over the country and we make it our business to touch base with as many colleagues as possible.

The suffering is widespread. In men's football, the Philippine is No. 42 out of 45 Asian countries and No. 191 out of 205 all over the world. Cable TV in the Philippines has incessantly featured soccer and Internet accessibility coupled with the showbiz popularity of many major world soccer players has caught the attention of Filipinos. If not for this and the dogged devotion of some schools, colleges and universities, plus the Armed Forces of the Philippines and various soccer NGOs, our sinking would have been steeper and faster.

Is there no money for soccer here? The PFF comparative totals for 2003 through 2005 and the budget for 2006 are, respectively, the following: P27,194,573; P28,458,543 and P34,498,153 and P38,402,616—have money but still no honey!

To make matters worse, the NCRFA discovered on May 22, 2006 that the Securities and Exchange Commission had revoked the PFF's registration on Nov. 3, 2003 for reportorial violations, rendering the NSA "lifeless" as a legal entity, except for the last act of liquidating its affairs no later than Nov. 3, 2006. Among missing requirements are audited financial statements.

The NCRFA, as a member of the NSA, immediately filed a formal request to lift the revocation, and sadly, that's where we are today.

Since then, the PFF ceased to exist, as such, starting Nov. 3, 2003. Mr. Juan Miguel Romualdez was "elected" on Nov. 30, 2003, garnering him a "position" that no longer exists. It is the position of many that Mr. Romualdez's "election" was invalid. Because of this, Mr. Romualdez is not the president of the PFF and as soon as he found this out, he should have stopped acting as such, especially on matters concerning the receipt and disbursement of funds and entering into contracts. Section 77 of the Corporation Code states that the officers, whose elections were held before its certificate of registration was revoked, should take over in a holdover capacity. In this case, Mr. Rene Adad.

Be that as it may, Mr. Romualdez assumed what he thought existed, and ruled in a manner that divided, rather than unified and strengthened the NCRFA. We best limit ourselves to our territory and let our brother FA presidents speak for their associations. Rather than work with us to develop what we had, he sought to dismantle the NCRFA first, and pick up the pieces later, so he could call the shots in the NCRFA. He claims to know better than Ms. Cristy Ramos, Santi Elizalde, Rene Adad, Tomas Lozano, Juan Cutillas and Mari Martinez, among many others, who believe in organization and efficiency.

The assets and the erstwhile being of the PFF have been assumed, for all intents and purposes, by one individual, and one individual alone. That leads us to believe that what we are not today is attributable to one solitary individual. Pit that versus millions of Filipino football youth, who remain under-empowered and you have the biggest tragedy in football.

Thank you for the wake-up call, a "first" of a "thousand steps" to get us back on track.

Lastly, Mr. Romualdez asks you and your readership not to keep a blind eye to what is happening in Muntinlupa, Las Piñas, Parañaque, Marikina (wait, these areas are under NCRFA but he has empowered them no end, so as to undermine our Association and foment disunity disorder and recession). In those areas, it would take a series of articles to show all and sundry who is doing what, badly!

You might want to ask him why he singles out only these FAs and what measurable results his grassroots programs have. It cost an arm and a leg but remains disjointed, after all the time and money.

Sincerely:
Jose Vito Borromeo

End is near for Fiba's ban on RP hoops

IN HUDDLE

Beth Celis

OKAY, OK, SO I spoke too soon, wrote too soon, about the bright prospects of the RP team in the 37th Chess Olympiad, based on pre-tournament forecasts, and because it looked that way... for a while.

Now my colleagues are chiding me again, saying that our nationals have indeed, "rewritten history," but for the worse.

Instead of logging our best ever record based on the premise that this is the best team we've ever sent to the Olympiad, the opposite happened.

Ranked 35th before the Turin Olympiad, our men's team slid down to 40-something, our worst-ever record. Even the ladies' significantly improved seeding will not compensate for this, according to my colleagues.

Congressman Butch Pichay made the right forecast, after all.

BAP President Joey Lina left yesterday for Kuwait to attend the 2006 Fiba Congress and simultaneous Fiba-Asia election of officers.

If reports are accurate and unforeseen hitches do not appear on the horizon, we should be receiving good news by the weekend from Joey, who has been working quietly to have the Fiba ban on the Philippines lifted.

With Rain or Shine ousted by Toyota-Otis 0-3 from the PBL Unity Cup finals, owner Raymond Yu is starting to have sleepless nights.

"Kung sa finals ng PBL hindi kami makasok even with a complete lineup, ano pa kaya ang mangyayari sa amin sa PBA where the competition is much, much tougher. Bakal tambakan kami by 30 points every game," said Raymond who has been having nightmares over such a scenario.

Welcoat, which took over the Shell franchise this year, was allowed to elevate only three of its players from its lineup to the PBA.

"I don't think we will be able to form a competitive team, even with the available talents in the 'protect 6' expansion pool or the free agent market. But I'm still hopeful we can find a way to make the team stronger, para naman hindi mawala ang balance ng competitive strength sa PBA," said Raymond.

This is interesting. Of the top 5 candidates in the season MVP race, only James Yap of Purefoods is in the top 5 of the Conference MVP contest. So far.

Of course the scenario is bound to change as the conference gets closer to the finale, but as of now, San Miguel players are dominating the top five slots. Beerman Danny Seigle leads with 1125 statistical points, followed by Dorian Peña with 1065. James Yap is third with 1059, followed by Alaska's Nic Belasco with 1040. Danny Ildefonso is running fifth with 1007.

For sure it will be very interesting season and conference MVP race.

SHAKEY'S V-LEAGUE

La Salle seeks No. 9

LA SALLE AIMS TO KEEP ITS WINNING streak when it faces underdog Lyceum in the Shakey's V-League semifinals today at the Blue Eagle gym in Loyola Heights.

The unbeaten Archers target a ninth straight victory against the Lady Pirates, who bring up the rear in the five-team semifinals.

In the second game at 5 p.m., Adamson eyes to repeat a 25-15, 25-17, 26-24 victory over San Sebastian early in the eliminations and keep its hold of second place.

And while the Lady Falcons are looking to inch closer to the top spot, the Lady Stags are hoping to stay in the hunt for a championship ticket.

La Salle	8	0
Adamson	6	2
S. Sebastian	5	4
Far Eastern	5	4
Lyceum	4	5

"If we can beat them (Adamson) twice and we win our other games, we'll have a chance of taking the other finals berth so we have to really win this one," said San Sebastian coach Roger Gorayeb.

The match will feature the rivalry of Adamson's tower of power Cherry Rose Macatangay and SSC's dominating Thai import Jaroen Sri Bulee.

Both ladies pack powerful spikes and are currently in the top three of the league's best scorers.

San Sebastian is fresh from a 25-13, 25-17, 25-25-9 triumph over Lyceum while Adamson is coming into the match on a 25-21, 25-15, 25-13 win over Far Eastern U. Marc Anthony Reyes

Wade avoiding comparisons to Jordan

MIAMI—THE COMPARISONS leave Dwyane Wade sheepish.

He knows they're almost inevitable, though. Wade hails from Chicago, grew up a Bulls fan. A Bulls jersey with the number 23 hangs in his arena. His acrobatic, high-flying moves are reminiscent of a certain six-time NBA champion. His body is sleek, muscular. And he has that uncanny knack of taking games over when his team needs it most.

Stop, Wade begs. He's not the next Michael Jordan. To him, the notion is blasphemous.

"I don't think he wants to be compared to anybody," Miami Heat center Shaquille O'Neal said. "I think he wants to be the first Dwyane Wade. I've witnessed a youngster who's earned his spot. He hasn't been given anything."

No, Wade has earned it all. Millions. Fame. Endorsements. Respect. And—most important to him—a chance to play for the NBA championship in only his third year. His Miami Heat will face the Dallas Mavericks for the title, with Game 1 on Thursday in Texas.

On that last point, there is no Jordan comparison.

He needed seven seasons to reach this stage.

"There will never be another Jordan. There's no question about that," Wade said. "The only thing I can try to do is go out and play the game the way I play it, and if people like the way I play, then that's great. And if people don't like the way I play, hopefully I can make them like the way I play."

"But there'll never be another Jordan and people need to stop comparing guys to MJ."

Wade has taken his game to new heights every season in Miami—from 16.2 points on 47 percent shooting as a rookie who reached the Eastern Conference semifinals, to 24.1 points on 48 percent shooting and a trip to the East finals the next year, to 27.2 points and 50 percent shooting this season.

As his numbers have soared,

WADE: Incomparable AP

so have the Heat's fortunes.

"No one can look at him, including me, and say we saw this coming at this rate," said Tom Crean, Wade's college coach at Marquette. "But you look at him, you look at his drive, it shouldn't be a big surprise."

Right now, the Heat can only hope 24-year-old Wade's health gets better.

He missed practice on Monday, the team choosing to send him to a doctor instead for continued treatment of a flu-like virus he's been battling since Friday. He scored 14 points that night, helping Miami beat Detroit 95-78 and clinch the East title.

"We're going to be OK," O'Neal said after Monday's practice.

Wade's been better than OK in these playoffs.

He's been one of the best players in the field.

Wade made 62 percent of his shots against the Pistons, averaging 26.7 points, 5.5 assists and 5.2 rebounds. For the playoffs, he's shooting 51 percent, averaging 26.2 points, 6.4 assists, 5.2 rebounds and 2.1 steals.

When O'Neal arrived in Miami two summers ago—after his notorious fallout with Kobe Bryant and getting traded away by the Los Angeles Lakers—the hot topic was how Shaq and another young, standout guard would mesh together.

The answer? Perfectly. AP

Hot Nadal ousts Hewitt

Hingis advances

PARIS—RAFAEL NADAL REMAINED UNDEFEATED at Roland Garros by finally beating Lleyton Hewitt.

The defending French Open champion, Nadal moved into the quarterfinals and extended his record clay-court winning streak to 57 matches by eliminating Hewitt, 6-2, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2 Monday.

Hewitt won their three previous meetings, but those were all on hard courts, the most recent in January 2005.

It was a different story at Roland Garros, where Nadal improved to 11-0. He recoiled at the suggestion he's unbeatable on clay.

"I'm going to lose in this tournament, or the next, or the next," Nadal said. "Every match is difficult. Every match I can lose."

But the Spaniard hasn't lost on clay since April 2005, and he moved closer to a showdown in the final Sunday against top-ranked Roger Federer.

"He's very much like Federer, winning so many matches that it's sort of second nature for him," Hewitt said.

Martina Hingis claimed the last spot in the women's quarterfinals, beating Shahar Peer, 6-3, 2-6, 6-3, in the completion of a match suspended overnight. Two unseeded men, Julien Benneteau and Novak Djokovic, earned their first Grand Slam quarterfinal berths, and No. 4 Ivan Ljubicic also advanced.

With a sun-splashed center-court crowd backing Hewitt's upset bid, the Aussie played Nadal on even terms for 2½ hours, winning cleared the net, landed on the sideline and bounced sideways as Hewitt chased it off the court in vain.

Nadal held at love to close the set and broke three times in the final set, when Hewitt had five of his six double faults.

"Late in the third and the whole fourth set, my serve did go off," Hewitt said. "That made it a lot harder to put pressure on him."

Nadal was coming off a grueling victory that took nearly five hours Saturday. But he looked like the fresher player at the finish, advancing in 3 hours, 17 minutes on the warmest day of the tournament.

And not once did Nadal choke on a banana—a problem that forced an interruption for a visit from a doctor during his third-round marathon.

"I'm not going to stop eating bananas,"

11 consecutive points during one stretch.

"Hewitt is someone who, when you let him grab a finger, he takes the arm," Nadal said. "He's a great competitor."

But at 4-all in the third set, Nadal broke serve with a typically nifty shot—a backhand slice that barely cleared the net, landed on the sideline and bounced sideways as Hewitt chased it off the court in vain.

Joining him on the men's schedule Wednesday will be Frenchman Benneteau, who advanced when Alberto Martin retired with a back injury trailing, 5-1.

Ljubicic beat unseeded Ruben Ramirez Hidalgo, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2, giving Croatia two men's quarterfinalists at Roland Garros for the first time. Compatriot Mario Ancic advanced Sunday and will face Federer on Tuesday.

Djokovic defeated Frenchman Gael Monfils, 7-6 (5), 7-6 (5), 6-3.

Hingis' opponent Tuesday will be Kim Clijsters. It's a rematch of the Australian Open quarterfinals, which Clijsters won shortly after Hingis' return from a three-year injury layoff.

"I've made a lot of improvement since Australia," Hingis said. "We'll see."

A five-time Grand Slam champion, the No. 12-seeded Hingis is playing at Roland Garros for the first time since 2001. It's the only major event she has yet to win.

The 19-year-old Peer fell short in her bid to become the first Israeli, male or female, to reach a Grand Slam quarterfinal. But she gave Hingis some anxious moments.

After taking a 5-2 lead, Hingis hit a handful of shaky shots trying to seal the victory but did so when Peer hit errant backhands on the last three points.

"To be really scared of losing, she would have to be closer to be really totally scared," Hingis said.

Wie bungles US Open bid

SUMMIT, NEW JERSEY—MICHELLE Wie failed in her bid to become the first woman to play in the US Open, teasing a frenzied gallery for 27 holes until three straight bogeys sent her to a 3-over 75 and into the middle of the pack on Monday.

"Obviously, I'm disappointed I didn't make it," she said. "I'm satisfied with the way I tried."

Wie opened with a 68 on the easier South course and still had a chance to get one of 18 spots available to the 153-player field at Canoe Brook heading to the back nine. Needing at least one birdie to have a chance, her inability to master the greens finally caught up with her. And the cheers from 3,500 fans which carried her throughout the day turned to sympathetic applause at the end.

She finished at 1-over 143, five strokes short, and in a tie for 59th. Most of the shots were given away on birdie putts inside 12 feet which she missed throughout the day, especially in the morning.

"The greens are difficult for her. So many subtle breaks," her father B.J. Wie said. "I'm very proud of her. A little disappointed, but very proud."

NICOLE Beverly: Camera-ready.

ROBERT Chien: The new dad is "wonderful."

Light and love of Lea's life

By Bayani San Diego Jr.

NEW MOM LEA SALONGA shares with INQUIRER Entertainment the latest photos of her daughter Nicole Beverly Chien at two and a half weeks old. Baby Nicole was born on May 16.

The e-mailed answers to our questionnaire came with an apology. "Sorry [for the delay]... but life's gotten a bit busy for us."

Still, the photos came with cute captions.

One blurb read: "Only two and half weeks old and posing already!"

Another showed a yawning Nicole with the one-liner: "Holy lungs... I know I've got the lungs for it!"

What is it like being a mom? Is it everything you expected it to be?

So far, it's wonderful, wonderful, wonderful being a mom! I'm loving every single minute of it. It's tough, though, getting up to change or feed her when I'm severely sleep deprived, which is where Rob comes in. And he's been stellar.

My expectations of motherhood? My approach to everything is very practical and pragmatic. This was no exception. I didn't see motherhood as an experience that would complete me as a woman. I considered myself complete already. I wasn't going to put pressure on Nicole to be the completion of me. That wouldn't be fair to her. I want to set an example for her, that a woman should already be complete in herself before raising a family.

How's Rob as dad? How's the new lola (or Abu, which is how Ligaya Salonga prefers to be called)?

The new daddy is wonderful... he's wonderful with Nicole. He changes the diapers and feeds her (with bottled breast milk), cradles her and takes a gazillion pictures every day. Abu (my mom) is super excited, and enjoys being around her. She hasn't been able to baby-sit for an extended period of time yet.

Have you figured out the feeding/diaper change routine?

Rob has been helping out tremendously. There are mornings when I have the hardest time waking up, so he takes over the diaper routine then brings her to me to nurse. When I'm up and about though, then I do as much as I can before turning in for the night. I breastfeed on demand, which means anything from

RP 'Idol' vs 'PBB'

By Bayani San Diego Jr.

EVEN THE MOST UNINTERESTED viewers caught the implication: the next incarnation of ABS-CBN's "Pinoy Big Brother," dubbed "Pinoy Dream Academy," is going head to head against ABC 5's "Philippine Idol."

"Dream Academy" premieres in August; "RP Idol" in July.

Both are reality singing contests in which unknowns are housed together and undergo training and/or a makeover in front of the camera.

Both are foreign franchises. "Academy" is from the same Dutch company behind "PBB"; "RP Idol" is from FremantleMedia, based in the United Kingdom.

According to "PBB" director Lauren Dyogi, Endemol's show is called "Fame Academy" in the UK; "Star Academy" in France; "La Academia" in Italy and Spain.

"The housemates will be called students and they'll still live in the same house [on Mother Ignacia Avenue, Quezon City], but we'll modify it to include workshop and rehearsal areas, a recording studio, principal's office and teachers' lounge," Dyogi told INQUIRER in a phone interview.

He added that "Dream Academy" will be aired nightly. "If 'Philippine Idol' is anything like 'American Idol' it will air only twice a week."

Percy Intalan, ABC 5's head of Creative and Entertainment Production, corrected Dyogi: "Philippine Idol" is also a nightly, prime time show."

'Why not?'

Clearly, "Dream Academy" is envisioned as a direct competitor of "RP Idol."

Dyogi said, "I don't see why we can't put up another reality-singing contest on air. The Philippines will never run out of talented performers."

Intalan seemed unruffled by the impending showdown. "It's really exciting. First, ABC 5 set the trend with the celebrity dance competition 'Shall We Dance' [ABS-CBN] is also coming out

End of war?

Interestingly, Intalan noted, two RP "Idol" judges (Pilita Corrales and Francis Magalona) are from GMA 7, while the third one (Ryan Cayabyab) and the host (Ryan Agoncillo) are from ABS-CBN.

Did he think "RP Idol" would lead to a ceasefire in the network wars?

Intalan quipped: "They are the best not only in the two networks, but in the entire entertainment industry. All three judges realize the enormity of their responsibility. They know that they need to produce an 'RP Idol' who can stand side by side with 'Idols' from all over the world."

Dyogi insisted that "Dream Factory" was not an exact copy of the ultra-successful Free-Mantle product. "Instead of judges or Big Brother," he said, "there'll be instructors and a principal. It's a global search. We'll also conduct auditions in Filipino communities in Australia, Dubai, Japan, Italy and

IMAGINE THE RIVERBANKS Activity Center on a scorching summer afternoon. The newest kids' show group, Centermates, was set to perform there—no air-conditioning, seats mostly empty.

No matter. Randell Raymundo, Migs Raymundo, Christelle Peig, Jasmin Salvo and Carlyn Ocampo did their opening number. Passersby started to trickle in. A few more songs, and the place filled up. Halfway through the show, the place was jumping!

Come autograph-signing time, eager new fans swamped the group.

Were they born stars?

"No! No! No!" the singing kids protested. Caryn said, giggling, "I couldn't carry a tune before."

Butch Albarracin, founder and CEO of Center for Pop Music Philippines, where the group trained, had a theory:

"Stardom is prepared for. That's what they did."

The Centermates relished the applause: "Malupit!" "Parang ang galang-galing namin!" "Ang saya-saya!" "Sobrang exciting!"

They have a self-titled CD out, and another performance set on June 18, 7 p.m., at the AFP Theater, Camp Aguinaldo Theater in Quezon City. Nyoy Volante is their special guest.

'Captain Barbell' needs to fight for redemption

By Oliver M. Pulumbarit Contributor

THE FIRST FIVE EPISODES OF "Captain Barbell"—GMA 7's effects-heavy series about a tormented teen with superhuman powers, show some technical proficiency. But for all its snazzy digital effects, competent stunt sequences, and some decent acting, the series started off shakily, mainly because it mimicked many elements from other existing superhero stories. The title character's revamped origin is more science fiction-based, and while there's audacity in several ideas presented in its first episode, this re-imagining has led to an uncomfortable hodge-podge of "Smallville," "Spider-Man," and even "Terminator."

Ambitious

This hasn't gone unnoticed. One can look at certain scenes and situations and name the movie, TV show, or character that inspired them. Younger viewers may not be discerning of such things yet, but older ones could get distracted or turned off by the recurring non-originality.

As previously noted, the show started ambitiously. Cramped with superimposed digital wizardry and fancy props, the initial episode introduced a future, year 2106, when the Philippines is a major superpower, a place where scientific breakthroughs like genetic manipulation and cloning flourish.

A "Barbanium"-enhanced warrior, Captain B (Paolo Bediones) sends his wife and child to the past, to hide from a powerful "General." There, a century back, Mrs. B (Snoopy Serna) must prevent the General's rise to power, but her time machine crash-lands and accidentally kills Pinky Amador's pregnant character (her unborn daughter survives).

See the "Smallville" parallel yet?

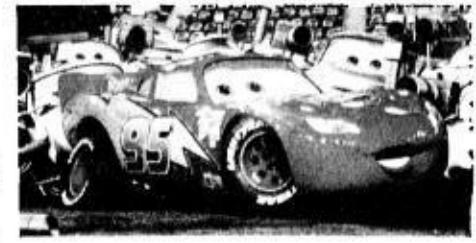

That daughter is an analogue of Laria Lang, Clark Kent's love interest, whose parents were killed by a meteorite shower in the show's first episode. Here, "Lana" is Lea (Rhiannon Denise Ramos), "Clark" is Teng (Richard Gutierrez), the kindly "Kents" are the Magtanggols (Dante Rivero and Gloria Sevilla), the über-rich "Luthors" are Viel and Levi Villan (Richard Gomez and Patrick Garcia), and "Smallville" is the thriving town of Maravillos. That's just for starters.

Teng, not a costumed hero until episode 5, lives a traumatic life, just like poor Peter Parker. It's exhausting to watch him repeatedly mauled by bullies and deal with the shocking demise of his adoptive father. Add a crazy Wolverine-like freak with glass shards for "claws" to the list... it's so contrived sometimes, that we don't root much for the hero, if at all.

Possibilities

It does make one wonder: Has Mars Ravelo's concept become so dated that the show resorted to "cloning" parts of other properties? There can't be a shortage of new ideas. The series' creative team just needs to mine the existing mythology, and since this is a fantasy show, the possibilities are limitless.

Despite its imperfections, "Captain Barbell" shows promise. The big-budgeted series can still prove escapist to those who want their regular action fix thunderous and eye-popping. It just needs to overcome its major clunks immediately, and breathe life into an original Pinoy super-champ with more imaginative adventures and back stories.

Cars

With the voices of Paul Newman, Owen Wilson, Tony Shalhoub, Bonnie Hunt

Directed by John Lasseter

Lightning McQueen is a hotshot neophyte race car that's driven to succeed. After being detoured to a sleepy Route 66 town, the overachieving rookie discovers that "life is about the journey; not the finish line" and that "there are more important things than trophies, fame and sponsorship." Peter Travers of Rolling Stone calls this Pixar animated film "a sure thing... What [this movie] teaches is how to blend brash comedy with technical astonishments so that each enhances the other." Josh Tyler of Cinemablend.com raves that it's a "love letter to the heyday of the American road." Richard Corliss of Time describes this flick as "an instant classic... existing both in turbo-charged today and the gentler 1950s, straddling the realms of Pixar styling and old Disney heart." Opens June 8.

Take the Lead

Stars Antonio Banderas, Dante Basco, Rob Brown, Alfre Woodard

Directed by Liz Friedlander

A Latin hottie volunteers to teach tough delinquents the heady joys of ballroom dancing. At first, the kids scoff at him, but they eventually learn how to samba and salsa. Kit Bowen of Hollywood.com rants: "Maybe they should have titled this hackneyed [tale] 'Stand and Dance' or 'Shall We Dance... in Detention.'" Nancy Churnin of the Dallas Morning News commends Fil-Am Dante Basco who, along with Jenna Dewan and Marcus T. Paulk, "perform one heck of a steamy tango number." Tracy Allerton of the South Florida Sun-Sentinel complains: "[Apart from] the rousing ending, which combines ballroom and hip-hop moves in an exciting way, the film offers nothing we haven't seen before." Opens June 7.

Welter of contradictory motives

IN "X-MEN: THE LAST STAND," HUMANS' fear of the superpowers of mutants is solved by the discovery of a "cure" for mutancy.

With this new antidote, mutants can become "normal" members of society.

However, some mutants, including confederation of leaders Magneto (Ian McKellen) and Charles Xavier (Patrick Stewart) are not so sure. They see in the "cure" an attempt by government to control mutants' exceptional powers.

These contrary views force mutants to choose which side to take in the dispute. Magneto plays a wild card in the person of Jean (Famke Janssen), a mutant with the greatest powers.

The problem with her is the fact that her powers become uncontrollable when her personality is taken over by a vicious persona named Phoenix. It is this dark and sinister force that has made her kill her own boyfriend.

Fears about Jean's "runaway" powers turn out to be merited when she wreaks havoc on Xavier himself. With his rival leader now disposed of, Magneto rallies most of the world's mutants to wage war against the government, to prevent their collective emasculation through the devious use of the antidote.

VIEWFINDER

Nestor U. Torre

Where does Wolverine (Hugh Jackman) figure in all this? He decides to fight against Magneto's forces, and forces his beloved Jean to make the supreme sacrifice so that her powers can't be misused by Magneto for his own dark ends.

Thus does the final episode of the "X-Men" trilogy shape up as a many-layered morality tale, in which good sometimes disguises itself as evil, and vice versa.

This is because the motives of both government and mutant leaders are often suspect, so we can't be sure which side should end up on top.

After a while, however, the confusing welter of contradictory motives as the plot unfolds results in an occasional disconnect that diminishes viewers' involvement in the conflict and action.

Another problem is the excessive number of mutants who figure in this final episode. With so many characters quickly making their entrances and exits, the movie loses some of its focus and capacity to elicit viewers' empathy.

Yes, the mutants' diverse range of powers is exciting to watch, but the variety soon takes its toll on the movie's emotional quotient.

That's why, at film's end, no character "owns" the production. On point of talent, McKellan and Jackman are clearly superior to the other cast members but even their characters can't provide the emotional fulcrum that the production needs to rise to a cathartic and truly illuminating climax.

Kids to watch: Centermates

IMAGINE THE RIVERBANKS Activity Center on a scorching summer afternoon. The newest kids' show group, Centermates, was set to perform there—no air-conditioning, seats mostly empty.

No matter. Randell Raymundo, Migs Raymundo, Christelle Peig, Jasmin Salvo and Carlyn Ocampo did their opening number. Passersby started to trickle in. A few more songs, and the place filled up. Halfway through the show, the place was jumping!

Come autograph-signing time, eager new fans swamped the group.

Were they born stars?

"No! No! No!" the singing kids protested. Caryn said, giggling, "I couldn't carry a tune before."

Butch Albarracin, founder and CEO of Center for Pop Music Philippines, where the group trained, had a theory:

"Stardom is prepared for. That's what they did."

The Centermates relished the applause: "Malupit!" "Parang ang galang-galing namin!" "Ang saya-saya!" "Sobrang exciting!"

They have a self-titled CD out, and another performance set on June 18, 7 p.m., at the AFP Theater, Camp Aguinaldo Theater in Quezon City. Nyoy Volante is their special guest.

Truefaith, dongabay have new albums

DONG ABAY, FORMER Yano and Pan front man whose new band is named, uh... dongabay, rocks anew with the release of his new album, "Filipino."

Abay wrote all 14 original tracks—in Filipino.

He explains: "I played with the language here. After all, language is very much like music—one can play with the sound, stretch it, expand it, shrink or tighten it. That's the idea."

Dong said "Filipino" took more than two months to make. One of his mentors at UP, Robin Rivera, produced the album; pals Buddy Zabala and Raimund Marasigan played bass and drums on all the tracks, with Vinty Lava on guitars. Sound engineer was Shinji Tanaka of Sound Creation Studio.

"Filipino" is now available at all record shops. From Synergy Records.

Finishing touches

After a two-year absence from the recording scene, the band Truefaith—led by Medwin Marfil, with Kenneth Ilagan and Eugene Marfil on guitars, Bimbo Yance on bass, Jake Lumacan on keyboards and Benedict Esguerra on drums—is now putting the finishing touches to its much-awaited 11th album enti-itled "Stray To Be Found" (EMI). Fans who can't wait can check out the video for the first single off the album, "Dahil Ikaw" (Love theme from the teleserye, "Sa Piling Mo") on www.truefaith.com.ph.

Neda go-ahead sought for $700-M South Rail project

By Daxim L. Lucas

THE TRANSPORTATION DEPARTMENT HAS sought the approval of the National Economic and Development Authority for the proposed South Rail project that will link Metro Manila to Bicol through high-speed train service.

In an interview, Transportation Undersecretary Guling A. Mamondiong said his office was now waiting for the go-ahead from the Neda's Investment Coordination Committee before proceeding with negotiations with the Chinese government for the project's funding.

"This whole project will cost up to $700 million," he said. "[The Chinese government] has offered to help fund it."

He said the deal with the Chinese was similar to that signed for the $503-million North Rail program—a controversial project roundly criticized for allegedly being overpriced—which was also supported by the People's Republic of China.

The government has yet to determine whether China National Machinery and Equipment Corp. (CNMEG), the main North Rail contractor, would also be involved in the South Rail program.

As early as last year, CNMEG has expressed its interest to take part in the South Rail project, despite an earlier agreement between the Philippine government and a Korean contractor.

"This will be a 500-kilometer project [extending] from Calamba, Laguna to Bicol," Mamondiong pointed out, explaining why it was expected to be more expensive than the North Rail program.

Unlike the North Rail, however, which involved the construction of new facilities, the DOTC official said the South Rail project would mainly involve the rehabilitation of existing facilities like the train tracks currently being used by the Philippine National Railways.

Apart from the infrastructure, the train tracks will be reconfigured to be able to handle high-speed trains.

"We are still studying which is the best," he added, referring to the kinds of train systems and infrastructure the project will have, although they are likely to be sourced from China if a funding agreement is finalized between both countries.

Mamondiong, who oversees the government's rail projects, said construction of the South Rail would start next year after all approvals shall have been secured and will take anywhere from four to five years finish.

Inflation slows to 6.9%

Strong peso tempers rise in basic prices in May

By Michelle V. Remo

INFLATION EASED FURTHER TO 6.9 PERCENT year-on-year in May, the lowest in four months, as the stronger peso helped temper the effects of the higher value-added tax on prices of consumer products.

The latest inflation rate, which beat the forecast made by the National Economic and Development Authority (Neda), was a deceleration from the 7.1 percent in April and the 7.6 percent in February and March.

It also brought the average inflation rate for the first five months of the year to 7.2 percent.

In May last year, inflation stood at 8.5 percent.

"This is better than our expectations. This will help us meet, if not surpass, our inflation target for the full year of 7.3 to 7.9 percent," said Dennis Arroyo, Neda director for policy and planning.

The Neda earlier projected that inflation in May likely settled at between 7 and 7.3 percent.

The National Statistics Office yesterday reported that prices of nearly all commodity groups, except for clothing and services, increased at a slower rate than the previous months. Only clothing and services failed to register a decelerated inflation rate.

The NSO said the inflation rate for products belonging to the food, beverage and tobacco group stood at 5.9 percent in May, down from 6.1 percent in April. Prices of housing and repair items rose an average 4 percent, also slower than the 4.2 percent the month before; fuel, light and water, to 13.4 percent from 15.9 percent, and miscellaneous

Soy sauce companies urged to improve product quality

By Christine A. Gaylican

THE BUREAU OF AGRICULTURE AND FISHERIES Product Standards, an attached agency of the Department of Agriculture, has urged local soy sauce manufacturers to upgrade their facilities to make locally-manufactured soy sauce acceptable to the international market.

"All of our soy sauce manufacturers need to improve their facilities [so that] their products [will have a] longer shelf-life. This is the concern of importing countries like the European Union," said BAFPS Director Gilbert Layese in an interview.

The European Commission's Food Standards Agency has banned the entry of Philippine-made soy sauce because it has been found to contain the chemical contaminant 3-monochloropropene-1,2-diol (3-MCPD), which could pose a health hazard.

Layese said existing facilities of soy sauce manufacturers were outdated and unable to remove impurities.

Soy sauce is a salty, dark liquid produced from fermented soybeans and roasted grain.

It accounts for the bulk of condiments exported by the Philippines with a 37.39 percent share, followed by vinegar.

Households from NCR, Southern Tagalog, and Central Luzon were the leading buyers of these condiments.

BSP expected to keep policy rates unchanged

Traders see 50 bps hike in H2

By Doris C. Dumla

THE BANGKO SENTRAL NG Pilipinas yesterday said it could keep its overnight interest rates steady in the short term given the slowdown in the country's annual inflation rate to 6.9 percent in May from 7.1 percent in April.

The BSP, which has kept its overnight rates unchanged for the eighth straight month during its monthly policy-rate setting last week, sees its current overnight rates still appropriate with the current economic environment.

The May inflation rate released by the National Statistics Office yesterday was close to the lower end of BSP's target range, BSP Gov. Amando Tetangco Jr. pointed out.

"Demand pressures are broadly muted. Supply shocks are still dominant and price pressures from these should not be long-lasting," Tetangco said.

"This provides some basis for keeping the present policy stance at this time, while keeping an eye on domestic liquidity and foreign interest rate movements," Tetangco said.

TETANGCO

The BSP sees the inflation rate slowing down by the second semester. Its overnight borrowing rate is at 7.5 percent while lending rate is at 9.75 percent.

But traders said the BSP would likely raise its interest rates by about 50 basis points in the second semester to nudge up low-yielding Treasury bill rates.

Will Oswald, JP Morgan's global head of emerging markets quantitative strategy, said Asian central banks would still be affected by the US Federal Reserve's future action.

Shipping firm starts modernization program

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

LORENZO SHIPPING CORP IS embarking on a modernization program to boost revenue and help offset higher costs arising from fuel price increases.

LSC president Romeo Malig told stockholders yesterday that fuel costs this year were expected to increase by 15 to 16 percent to P466 million from P400 million last year.

The cargo liner industry, he said, was marked by volatile prices and tight competition.

"LSC is set on being the cargo liner of choice by enhancing service quality," he said.

In line with this, Malig said LSC would spend P70 million for the acquisition of dry and livestock containers. Of the amount, P50 million will be used to purchase 500 dry containers while P20 million will be used to buy 60 livestock vans.

In the first quarter, net revenue grew 11.54 percent to P324.6 million. Volume as measured by ton equivalent units was lower by 7 percent due to the softening of the market.

PNOC-EDC to drill new geothermal well in Leyte

By Abigail L. Ho

PHILIPPINE NATIONAL OIL CO.-Energy Development Corp. (PNOC-EDC) plans to drill a new geothermal well in Cabalian, Southern Leyte to determine whether the available steam in the area could support the generation of 100 megawatts to 110 MW of power.

Eduardo Mafialac, president and chief executive of PNOC-EDC parent firm PNOC, said the drilling would be done this year.

Depending on the results of the drilling, he said the state firm would be able to determine the feasibility of developing the project, which could pave the way for a new power source for the power-hungry Mindanao grid.

In terms of funding, he said PNOC-EDC had already talked to the Japan Bank for International Cooperation for possible official development assistance (Oda).

He said the construction of an 87-kilometer transmission line that would deliver power from the Cabalian area to Ormoc, also in Leyte was critical to the project.

Also, he said a $400-million submarine cable would also have to be constructed to transport power from Cabalian to Northern Mindanao.

National Transmission Corp. president and chief executive Alan Ortiz earlier said the state firm would be battling for a 2009-2010 implementation of the multi-million-dollar Leyte-Mindanao interconnection project.

He said it would make sense for the government, through the Department of Energy, to revisit the project and possibly accelerate its implementation as it could help prevent a power crisis in the Mindanao grid.

RP eyes $1-B bond float

THE PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT plans to tap the offshore capital market anew for a fresh global bond offering of about $1 billion this month, banking sources said yesterday.

After a regional sell-down on emerging markets that jacked up the yields on Republic of the Philippines bonds in previous weeks, the government invited over the weekend investment bankers to submit a new foreign bond float proposal, the sources said.

The government did not indicate the size or maturity of the planned offer, but banking sources said it would shoot for $1 billion—representing its remaining foreign financing requirement for this year.

"The market is not as good as before, but it's good enough. Besides, you'll never know whether the future will be better or worse," an investment banker who submitted a proposal said.

The banker also said it would be better to join the offshore debt pipeline now because the global markets seasonally turned sluggish in July and August when most fund managers were usually out for summer vacation.

The much-awaited World Cup, the banker said, would also add to the market's distraction if the government were to wait longer.

The Philippines had already filed with the US Securities and Exchange Commission an application for authority to raise as much as $3.5 billion in global bonds.

The last time the government joined the high-yield debt pipeline was in January, raising $2.1 billion through a combination of global bond and euro bond floats. Doris C. Dumla

Petron studying feasibility of second refinery

By Abigail L. Ho

No plan to take over Poro Point, says BCDA exec

THE BASES CONVERSION DEVELOPMENT Authority seemed to have backed off a brewing controversy over an apparent plan to take over Poro Point seaport after Judge Robert Cawed of the Regional Trial Court Branch 29 of San Fernando City, La Union slapped the agency and its subsidiary, Poro Point Management Corp., with a temporary restraining order.

The TRO was issued in response to a complaint filed by Bulk Handlers Inc. (BHI) against PPMC for passing a resolution declaring the contract BHI signed with BCDA in 1999 null and void. BCDA was included in the complaint.

BCDA president Narciso Abaya admitted in a statement that "only the courts could declare such contracts null and void."

"I would like to assure our investors and businessmen that the BCDA does not have any intention of declaring the Poro Point contract null and void," Abaya said.

Abaya said he was reacting to reports that the Northern Luzon business community was in an uproar over the reported takeover move of the BCDA after the PPMC board passed a resolution declaring the BCDA-BHI contract null and void.

PPMC is led by BCDA chair Filadelfo Singson-Rojas Jr. and Felix Singson-Racadio, president. The board also includes Emma Lim, Carmencita Itchon, Amparo Aspiras, Yves Nisce and Antonio Manguiat, son-in-law of La Union Congressman Manuel Ortega.

"We have no power to nullify contracts," Abaya underscored.

Earlier, the National Consumer Welfare Advocates Inc. (NCWAI) warned Abaya and Singson-Rojas that the reported take-over move "would send wrong signals to the investors in the region that the government does not believe in the sanctity of contracts."

NCWAI president Conrado delos Reyes said the local business community was aware that BHI had consistently remitted P50 million yearly to BCDA despite the latter's failure to deliver 80 hectares of the land in Poro Point to BHI as part of the 1999 agreement.

INDUSTRY LEADER PETRON CORP. WILL look into the feasibility of either putting up a second oil refinery in Mindanao or expanding its existing refinery in Bataan.

Petron president and chief executive Khalid Al-Faddagh said President Macapagal-Arroyo, during her visit to Saudi Aramco a few weeks ago, asked Petron to study the possibility of building a second refinery in Mindanao.

Saudi Aramco holds a 40-percent stake in Petron.

"Of course, it has to make economic sense. That's really what we have agreed on, for Petron to do a feasibility study," he said.

New plant in Mindanao or expansion of facility in Bataan

He said the oil firm had already done a similar feasibility study in the past, but under "different economic conditions."

"We're now revisiting that study to determine whether that (refinery) will be built in Mindanao or in Bataan," he said.

Should the feasibility study show that it would not make economic sense for Petron to put up a refinery in Mindanao, he said the oil firm was committed to explore an alternative development project for the area, possibly an ethanol plant.

He said this would help spur the growth of the sugarcane industry as well as the use of biofuels in the country.

"But we need to be assured that we have a very strong (sugarcane) supply base in the Philippines. That's what we have been saying all along. We want to see a very strong ethanol industry that would make the most economic sense, and we believe in having such an industry in Mindanao," he said.

He said the feasibility study should take between two and three months to complete.

Petron has committed to eventually blend ethanol with its gasoline products through a memorandum of understanding with San Carlos Bio-Energy Inc., a joint venture between the National Development Corp. and Bronzeak Philippines that will produce some 100,000 liters of bioethanol a day in its distillery plant by 2007.

Fellow refiner Pilipinas Shell Petroleum Corp. started selling ethanol-blended gasoline last month, while Seaoil Petroleum Corp. started doing so as early as August last year.

Both oil firms rely on ethanol imports.

Local firm to assemble cheaper light trucks

TO MAKE AVAILABLE MORE AFFORDABLE COMMERCIAL VEHICLES for small businesses, Eastar Automotive Marketing Corp. will start the assembly and distribution of its second series of light trucks in the country—the Foton Gordox line.

Eamco imports for local assembly one- to four-tonner Foton Gordox mini trucks in CKD (completely knocked down) forms from Beiqi Motor Corp. in China. The company will make available in the local market the Foton Gordox in four variants: Cab-chassis only or with aluminum body, FB body type, jeepney type and drop side.

Eamco introduced in the local market in September last year the Yuejin Landox light trucks, bought in CKD form for local assembly from Yuejin Motor Corp., a subsidiary of Nanjing Automobile Group Corp. also of China.

Eamco marketing manager Rico San Agustin said the Foton Gordox vehicles were designed for small businesses that could not afford commercial vehicles that were currently available in the local market. He said all of its variants were affordable with the mini truck cab-chassis to be sold for only P350,000. Foton Gordox vehicles are covered by a warranty for one year or for the first 30,000 kilometers.

The vehicles are assembled locally under the strict quality control by Star Motors Manufacturing Inc.

The Foton Gordox vehicles were launched during the four-day China Machinery and Electronic Products Exhibit at the World Trade Center which started yesterday.

Eamco's Chinese partners—Nanjing Automobile Group and Beiqi Foton Motors—are among the leading light trucks manufacturers in China. Beiqi Foton is listed on the Shanghai Stock Exchange.

"The availability of brand new but affordable light trucks is very good news to our Filipino entrepreneurs who have been forced to buy second-hand surplus units from Subic and Cebu as they could not afford the more expensive locally assembled Japanese light trucks," the company said in a statement.

PLDT system allows credit card deals in boondocks

Wireless arrangement also opens up ATM services in remote areas

By Daxim L. Lucas

RETAILERS AND BANKS IN THE remotest areas of the country will soon be linked wirelessly through a new point-of-sale system of the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Co. (PLDT), which uses cell sites instead of phone lines to transmit data.

The new service means that establishments even in rural areas will be able to accept credit card payments, while banks not reached by automated teller machine (ATM) networks may link up to them wirelessly.

The product, called Shops Work UnPlugged, or SWUP (pronounced "swoop"), is meant to address the need of retailers and banks for real-time data communications and is part of the company's effort to diversify away from its traditional mobile phone and landline products.

PLDT's corporate business group head Eric R. Alberto said the service would provide retailers and banks with multiple branches an expanded network for real-time monitoring of critical data for their operations.

"SWUP is the first bundled solution that makes wireless cashier point-of-sale and wireless card terminals possible," he said in a statement. "Retailers will now be able reach out to a bigger market in areas where physical connections are unavailable."

"This solution can also expand the frontiers of banking since the technology can be used to come up with wireless ATMs," he added. "You can even have an ATM at the beach."

PLDT said that the service is available in 99.57 percent of areas covered by its mobile phone unit Smart Communications Inc.

The network, using wireless terminals enabled with subscriber identity module (SIM) cards similar to those used in mobile phones, can transmit data at a rate of up to 170 Kilobits per second (Kbps).

The company said this rate is "more than enough for simple data communications involving cashier point-of-sales, card swipe and ATM transactions."

SWUP comes in three variants: Naked SWUP, which is a SIM only variant; SWUP Cash, which is SIM bundled with GPRS/EDGE modem; and SWUP Card, a point-of-sale service bundled with SIM.

PLDT's corporate business solutions head Nerissa S. Ramos said this new product will allow retailers

the flexibility to sell or position their stores without being restricted by physical network limitations.

Apart from retailers, she envisions that the product may even be used by taxicabs and delivery boys.

"There is the security provided by the SIM and security inherent in Smart's GPRS/EDGE network where there is a dedicated Access Point Name assigned per company," Ramos said, explaining its security features. "It does not go through the Internet, thus protecting clients from viruses and hackers."

Peso stumbles anew on threat of Fed hike

By Doris C. Dumla

THE PESO YESTERDAY STUMBLED anew against the US dollar, spooked by an increased probability that the US Federal Reserve would further raise its key interest rates later this month.

After moving farther away from the P53:$1 barrier late last week, the peso shed 11.5 centavos to close at 52.84 yesterday from Monday's 52.725 against the greenback.

"The market is still driven by sentiment in the global markets regarding the possibility of global interest rate hikes," said Estelito Biacora, vice president at Bank of the Philippine Islands and director of financial markets association ACI Philippines. "The market is looking at the strengthening of the US dollar versus major currencies ... related to the possibility of another interest rate hike (by the US Fed) on June 29."

This developed as Ben

Bernanke, the new chair of the United States Federal Reserve, issued a statement saying that the Fed must remain vigilant to ensure that inflation would stay under control, even as the growth in the world's largest economy was slowing down.

Analysts said the comments increased the probability that the US Fed would raise its benchmark rate for the 17th straight time to 5.25 percent when it meets this month.

Other Asian currencies likewise tumbled against the greenback after Bernanke's comments.

Higher interest rates in the US implied that assets denominated in local currencies would be less attractive to investors.

Yesterday, the volume at the local spot foreign exchange market amounted to $367.5 million.

At the Fort, Britain acquires property for new embassy

By Elizabeth L. Sanchez

MEGAWORLD CORP HAS AGREED to sell a portion of its 50-hectare McKinley Hill township project in Fort Bonifacio, Taguig to the British Embassy, the company said in a statement.

The British government will build a new embassy building on the site but no timetable has been set for the construction.

Megaworld officials declined to reveal the value of the deal, which involves the purchase of a 1.2-hectare lot.

The British Embassy, currently based in Makati City, is among the first institutions to locate its operations on McKinley Hill.

Megaworld is also in talks with foreign investors who will build international schools on McKinley Hill.

McKinley Hill's master plan divides the project into residential, office, retail and educational or institutional blocks. The first residential phase, dubbed McKinley Hill Village, targets a high-end market. Since its launch in May 2004, it has sold 75 percent of its 482 lots.

Megaworld is also set to launch new projects this year, which would use up P4 to P5 billion earmarked for capital expenditures.

Also, the firm is eyeing British companies that specialize in business process outsourcing and IT-enabled services as prospective locators entitled to various tax perks at the McKinley Hill Cyberpark.

The 35-hectare office block was approved as a special economic zone by the Philippine Economic Zone Authority in August 2005. A total of 200,000 square meters of high-tech office space has been provided for BPO and information technology companies.

Getting more out of your fuel

WITH THE CONTINUING RISE OF oil prices, one would think that there is nothing much to do but bear it and grin. But there is something that can be done. So here now is the ultimate road challenge: would you like to be able to travel an extra 100 kilometers on a tank load of gasoline or diesel? You can if you are able to drive more economically, and can get at least 2 kilometers more out of every liter of fuel you consume.

The Automobile Association Philippines (AAP), formerly Philippine Motor Association (PMA) strongly advocates the promotion and advancement of Philippine motoring as one of its mandates. As such, it has always pushed for more efficient and effective ways to curb the growing oil problem besetting the country today with practical tips that could help ease the motorist's burden with their fuel consumption.

The starting point is to be conscious of, and find out how many kilometers per liter you are able to get with the way you currently drive. Load up a full tank and zero your trip meter. After a week of driving, load to a full tank again, and divide the kilometers shown on your trip meter by the liters loaded, so you will get your kilometers per liter.

Then, drive for another week according to the following suggestions:

1 Keep your rpm as low as possible (without lug- ging your engine). This means making use of your car's tachometer (or rpm indicator) so that you can determine rpm levels when you can already upshift as quickly as possible. In many cases, this shift-point is when 2000 rpm is reached. In vehicles without tachometers, it is possible to

"sense" when this shift-point is reached. Light-footed acceleration in the case of cars with automatic transmission will produce the same results, as you will be able to determine at what rpm levels you can back off on the accelerator pedal to induce up-shifting.

2 Maintain your car's forward momentum. This means anticipating traffic and road conditions (even 3 to 4 cars ahead) so that you can minimize unnecessary braking—which not only wastes forward momentum energy, but also consumes added fuel to get back to your momentum speed. (One technique is to use your horn and/or flash your headlights to warn and keep pedestrians and vehicles from intruding onto your path.)

3 Make use of the gliding power of your car (espe- cially vehicles with automatic transmissions). This means backing off early when approaching traffic buildup, or intersections where traffic lights are on red, and even speed humps (in- stead of still stepping on the accelerator, only to brake hard at the last moment).

tance, requiring more energy and thus more fuel.

5 Drive with a light and steady foot on the accelerator pedal, avoiding unnecessary acceleration—unless you have to really drive in a hurry. Never pump the accelerator pedal (some drivers with nervous ticks or who are "hyper" do so).

6 Your car's engine must be properly tuned so that your fuel is burned efficiently.

7 You should develop the "art and science of overtaking"—which means alertly assessing road conditions even 3 to 4 cars ahead, keeping your car's momentum, and accelerating (or down-shifting if necessary) only as lightly as required. By anticipating, it is sometimes possible to just back off when you spot a temporary traffic ahead, and overtake still in the same gear (or down-shift- ing only one gear down)—in- stead of braking heavily (or even stopping behind a stopped jeepney) and down- shifting 2 or 3 gears lower. Otherwise, overtaking is a major cause of increased fuel consumption.

8 Cruise at the right speed. Because of the so-called "coefficient of drag"—the most economical cruising speed is the slowest which your vehicle can run in top gear (without lugging or underrevving your engine).

For auto transmissions, this means observing at what speed (and rpm) your car will upshift to its highest gear, and cruising 2 to 3 kph above that shift point, to stay in top gear. Depending on your car's final gear ratios, in most cases this will be between 60 and 70 kph (so you must also give due consideration in not being a road hog to faster-running ve- hicles).

9 Avoid engine braking unless absolutely neces- sary, because this spikes up your rpm and consumes more fuel. The braking system of today's cars no longer require downshifting/engine braking anyway.

10 Do not rev up your engine be- fore shutting it off; this is completely unnec- essary and just consumes more fuel.

By observing these suggestions, you will be surprised that you might just be able to get two additional 50-km round-trip commutes to work per tank load of fuel.

There is nothing we can do about the global supply and demand dynamics that determine fuel prices, but there is something we can do in the face of very high fuel prices—and that is to drive more economically.

Rosy talk

THE UNWILLING WILL HAVE TO AC- cept it.

Everybody's saying it already, from Detroit to Denmark, from Tokyo to Toronto, except the one that's been the subject of all this rosy talk.

Not even the big bosses at Toyota Motor Philippines like Ito-san, Ty-san, Nakashima-san, Isla-san, Socco-san from his Singapore base, or even Dexter/Sonny-san/Sherwin/Raymond/Apin/Jing/Elijah-san are saying it.

But like it or not, Toyota will become world No. 1 shortly. Officially, that is.

It's been the talk of the town since June 2005.

Toyota will be the last to say it.

Its preamble will have to crumble soon?

I don't think so.

It can always retain it: Be humble at all times. And still keep the title: No. 1 worldwide.

Toyota has been humble all these years, but the inevitable can't be stopped: Topple General Motors from the top.

The New York Times has said it. And when the newspaper of the world says it, no one disputes it. It's gospel truth.

In the fiscal year ended March 31, the New York Times reported that Toyota posted worldwide a 17.2 percent jump in net profit. That translates to a record 1.37 trillion yen (US$12.1 billion).

The record was its sixth consecutive in six years, enough to make it one of the world's most profitable manufac- turers.

In its vehicle sales forecast, Toyota said its entire group, including Daihatsu Motor and the truck maker Hino, will sell 8.45 million vehicles this fis- cal year, 476,000 more than last year.

That's more than enough to dislodge the cash-strapped, bankruptcy-bound GM as the world's largest carmaker.

While it sold 9.17 million vehicles last year, analysts expect GM to fare badly this year and, sadly, lose the top position it had held for 75 years.

GM is still struggling to recover from a US$10.6 billion loss amid labor tension and soaring gasoline prices.

It showed signs of stirrings in the first quarter, but if GM were to sell 8 percent fewer cars and Toyota exceeded its projections, then Toyota's on the way to becoming the world's largest automaker.

Said Katsushi Watanabe, president of Tokyo Motor Corp.: "Toyota's performance demonstrated the strength of our company's ongoing operational ef- forts."

In Asia alone, Toyota sales increased from 47,000 to 880,000, mainly due to the strong performance of IMV (Inno- vative International Multipurpose Vehicle) models, like the Innova, Fortuner and Hi-Lux.

"Our business environment will re- main severe, with a significant increase in raw material prices and competition intensifying," Watanabe said. "However, we wish to achieve results that exceed our latest financial results while continuing investment for future growth."

Through the years, Toyota has al- ways been moving forward because it wills to move forward.

How many among us have that same trait?

Accent on fuel economy

DIESEL ENGINES ARE USUALLY ASSOCIATED with big land transportation workhorses such as trucks, buses, vans, full-size SUVs and public utility vehicles. So when Hyundai Asia Resources Inc. (Hari) chose to launch the common rail direct injection (CRDi) diesel Accent instead of the gasoline version, it created a new niche in the lucrative compact sedan market.

At the same time, by coming up with the only CRDi compact car on the market, Hyundai consolidated its position as the leading brand in affordable CRDi vehicles. Aside from the Accent, Hari offers the Starex CRDi minivan (Best Entry Level Multipurpose Vehicle winner in the 2004 Car of the Year contest), the Santa Fe and Tucson CRDi sport utility vehicles, the Matrix CRDi hatchback and the Getz diesel subcompact.

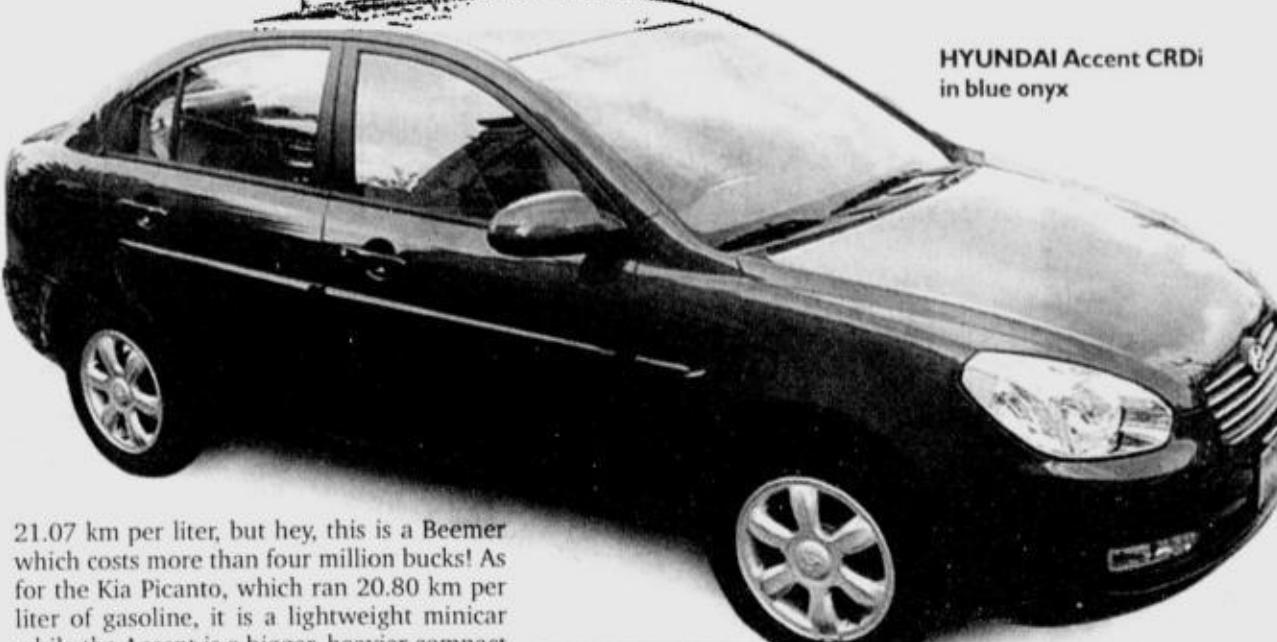

Mobility

Sure, there are other CRDi cars available, but they are BMW and Audi products that have bigger engine displacements and cost millions of pesos more. By putting CRDi vehicles within the reach of the average car buyer, Hyundai helps promote the nation's mobility and energy conservation programs.

This is because CRDi technology greatly improves the performance and fuel efficiency of the diesel engine, reduces its exhaust emissions and lowers NVH (noise, vibrations and harshness) to a level almost commensurate with that of a gasoline engine. According to Hari, the Accent's state-of-the-art diesel engine was designed and developed at Hyundai's R&D center in Russelsheim, Germany.

Efficiency

In these days of endlessly soaring oil prices, the fuel efficiency of a car assumes primary importance. In the Fuel Economy Run conducted by the Department of Energy last May 13, the Accent averaged 19.01 km per liter. Granted, the Toyota Vios 1.3 manual transmission topped the list by running 22.16 km per liter, but it has a smaller, less powerful engine than the Accent's 1.5. The BMW 520d, which has a 2.0-liter CRDi engine, averaged 21.07 km per liter, but hey, this is a Beemer which costs more than four million bucks! As for the Kia Picanto, which ran 20.80 km per liter of gasoline, it is a lightweight minicar while the Accent is a bigger, heavier compact with a 1.5 engine compared to the Picanto's tiny 1.1-liter engine.

HYUNDAI Accent CRDi in blue onyx

The certification tests conducted by the Car Awards Group Inc. (Cagi), the organization of motoring journalists that manages the annual Car of the Year program, the Accent CRDi posted 20 km per liter in constant-speed highway driving and 17 km per liter in heavy-duty city driving although the air conditioner was running.

By the way, diesel fuel costs at least P3 less per liter than unleaded gasoline.

Fast

But class-leading fuel economy isn't the only thing that the Accent CRDi has to offer. If you think that Hyundai sacrifices performance on the altar of fuel thriftiness, you are wrong. The Accent is incredibly fast, with exceptional acceleration and split-second engine responsiveness due to its variable geometry turbo (VGT). Its 1.5-liter twin cam 16-valve CRDi powerplant delivers 110 ps /4,000 rpm and more significantly, massive torque peaking at 24.0 kg-m/1,900-2,750

rpm. This enormous pulling power is why the Accent CRDi tackles steep uphill roads with more abilidad than other cars.

The Accent CRDi has impressive handling and steering characteristics, thanks in part to its smooth-shifting 5-speed manual transmission and MacPherson strut front suspension with coupled torsion beam axle at the rear. On the road, the CRDi engine runs almost as silently as a gasoline one without the noisy clatter and shaking produced by ordinary diesels.

Tempted

In fact, the Accent is so much fun to drive that you are constantly tempted to hit speeds exceeding 120 kph. A word of caution, though: the Accent's light weight and brakes (no ABS and only drums in the rear) do not ensure complete control at very high speeds. It would be safer—and more fuel-efficient—to maintain normal speeds.

The cabin comfortably seats four including driver but five occupants would be a tight fit. The rear seat splits 60/40 to increase luggage space and has a center armrest with cupholders. The interior's ergonomics are unexceptional except for the gear stick, which shifts into reverse toward the left upward like a European car's.

While keyless entry with alarm, fog lamps, air con and power windows and door locks are standard, the Accent has no airbag/s, no ABS, drum brakes in the rear and a pipsqueak horn. The Accent's body design will not win awards for esthetics. Other compact cars in the Accent's P768,000 price range look snazzier and offer higher specs and more safety features. But they don't have the Accent's CRDi advantage.

TODAY'S BUMPER STICKER: Better to understand a little than to misunderstand a lot.

Most fuel-efficient car in RP

THE TOYOTA VIOS AND THE INNOVA ARE THE MOST FUEL-EFFICIENT VEHICLES IN THE PASSENGER car (PC) and commercial vehicle (CV) segments respectively, based on the results of the recently concluded 2006 Fuel Economy Run by the Department of Energy (DoE). Both Toyota models are also the country's best selling vehicles to date.

Last May 13, the DoE held its 5th fuel economy test from its headquarters in Fort Bonifacio, Taguig City to Lipa City and back, with the support of the Traffic Management Group, the Citizen Traffic Action, Filcar and Shell Philippines. Twenty-three passenger cars and commercial vehicles from 8 car manufacturers and distributors participated, despite the bad weather conditions brought about by Typhoon "Caloy." Aside from Toyota Motor Philippines, the country's No. 1 automotive company, Mitsubishi, Volvo, Honda, Kia, Isuzu, Hyundai and BMW also sent their representative models.

After the 162.8-kilometer run, the Vios 1.3 J gas manual transmission achieved 22.16 km per liter consumption in the gasoline category, making it the most fuel-efficient car in the country. The other 10 entry vehicles in the gasoline categories included the Kia Picanto 1.1-liter MT with 20.8 km per liter mileage, and the Honda City 1.3-liter automatic transmission with total consumption of 17.5 km per liter.

Toyota's best-selling vehicle, the Innova, with 2.5-liter direct injection common rail diesel (D4D) engine, also posted high results with total consumption of 16.55 km per liter. The Isuzu Crosswind 2.5-liter averaged 16.15 liters.

Cebu Auto Show showcases the latest in auto industry

KIA'S Rio Sedan made its public debut at the auto show

NEW MODEL SUCH AS HONDA'S 8TH generation Civic, Hyundai Santa Fe and Kia's Rio Sedan made its public debut in the Cebu Auto Show 2006 held at the Ayala Center Cebu.

Kia Motors also held a mini fashion show and a soft launch of the Rio Sedan and all stocks of the Cebu-based dealer were already sold out during the show.

Kia Motor Philippines marketing manager Chut Velasquez believes that the sales of their Cebu dealership will substantially improve with the help of just concluded Cebu Auto Show.

Other exhibitors were also encouraged with actual on-site sales and reservations made during the show.

Auto show guests

Over 28,000 visitors trekked and braved the afternoon heat to visit the four-day auto show which was staged by the same group that brought the Manila International Auto Show 2006, the country's biggest and only international auto show which was held recently.

Also on display were the latest models from

CUSTOM car winner at the Cebu auto show

Ford, GM, Isuzu, Nissan and Suzuki. Over 50 cars were displayed in the mall and tent pavilion including customized cars owned by Cebu's motoring aficionados.

Highlights

A custom car show competition was held and led by veteran car show judge John Escobar who flew in from Manila for the occasion. Award categories included the coveted Best of Show Award.

Indoor and outdoor exhibitions, show cars, sound-offs, celebrity appearances and fashion shows were among the many highlights.

Gracing the opening of the show were Cebu Gov. Gwen Garcia and Cebu Chamber of Commerce president Francis Monera. Garcia welcomed the organizer's initiatives to showcase the best of what the automotive industry has to offer in Cebu.

Cleaner engines with new Petron Carbon Flush

AMID HIGH OIL PRICES AND IN SUPPORT of the government's energy conservation program, market leader Petron Corp. introduces a timely innovation called Petron Carbon Flush. The automotive product reduces emissions and improves fuel efficiency. Since the product is nontoxic and bio-degradable, it is easy to handle and environment-friendly.

A clean-running engine is the best solution to achieve fuel economy. Proper maintenance of your vehicle is the first step in getting the most out of your gasoline. Petron Carbon Flush is an added tool in your car to maximize fuel economy through clean engine power.

Added mechanical stress

It is normal for carbon deposits to build throughout an engine with age, but there is added mechanical stress when driving in stop and go traffic. This puts the engine under even more strain, resulting in added carbon build up in the intake and exhaust manifolds.

An engine with excessive amounts of carbon lodged in its intake cannot breathe freely. The combustion process is hampered and the fuel and air mixture isn't optimized. This results in unburned fuel, a less efficient engine and a bigger dent in our pockets.

Petron Carbon Flush safely removes carbon deposits resulting in a cleaner burning engine and therefore adding savings in fuel and better gas mileage. When used, it cleans and protects against carbon deposits, allowing our vehicles to perform at their best and yet maintain fuel efficiency.

Results of field tests

In recent field tests, smoke emissions of vehicles injected with Carbon Flush showed immediate visible improvement and a reduction of emissions by as much as 70 percent. More efficient combustion also resulted in fuel savings of nearly 10 percent.

Petron Carbon Flush is injected into a running engine as a fine spray. Microscopic particles are then carried throughout the inner workings of the fuel injection system, breaking down carbon deposits throughout each stage of the four-stroke combustion cycle. During each intake, compression, combustion and exhaust cycle, Petron Carbon Flush actively breaks down carbon deposits. The loosened carbon particles are then ejected in the fourth cycle and carried outside of the engine along with the exhaust gases.

Having Petron Carbon Flush in each stage of the process cleans your engine through each step of the way, eliminating harmful carbon deposits. With continuous use, this ensures a cleaner burn and a more efficient engine and bigger savings, all without sacrificing performance. Petron Carbon Flush is initially available in 21 Petron service stations and will offer it to motorists free for one month.

Latest technologies

"A clean engine is an efficient engine. The launch of our Petron Carbon Flush is part of a larger effort to promote energy conservation by providing our customers the latest technologies to enhance engine performance, and Petron will continue to implement programs to ease the burden of rising fuel prices," said Nicasio I. Alcantara, chair of Petron.

Petron president and CEO Khalid D. Al Faddagh stated that as industry leader, Petron will continue to drive its fuel research and technology efforts to give consumers more value for money. "At the same time, we continue to set the standards in terms of locally produced clean air fuels, Petron Carbon Flush is another example of how we harness new technology to respond to the needs of our customers," he said.

An amazing fuel mileage of 38.7km/liter...*

How to make a good impression without really trying

By Danicar Mariano
2bU! Correspondent

OKAY, SO YOU'RE ALL PSYCHED up and ready to meet your classmates. But how about your teachers? After all, in the politics of school, the teacher is the one that has the final say on your grade—and when it comes to that, as in everything else, the concept of Blink is operative. No matter how exhaustive or meticulous or objective the grading process is, the first impression you make, goes a long, long way.

Don't let this scare you, however. Here are tips on "how to impress your teacher without really trying." Of course, therein lies the operative phrase: without really trying. That's really one of the most basic premise. As the movie "Hitch" goes: "you cannot use what you do not have, so if you're shy, be shy, if you're assertive, be assertive," but the point is to get it across to your teacher at the earliest possible point that you are an A-worthy student.

It's not what you do, it's how you do it

Many of our decisions are made on an unconscious level. Eighty percent of communication is, in fact, nonverbal more than the verbal, and that is what we trust more. It is literally not what you do, or say, but how you do or say it.

Dress smart

What does it take to look intelligent? Vertical stripes give the appearance of togetherness and righteousness. A pale shade of yellow also gives off an intellectual appeal. Pink is said to be ideal to wear in court hearings or on first days, as it makes you look sympathetic.

Blue, on the other hand, gives the impression of eloquence, calm and stability. Try to avoid colors that are too flashy or loud on the first day, like blood red or neon orange or lime green, unless that is what you can live up to—being a loud but brilliant genius student for the rest of the semester. Try not wear something too revealing, as it may give off the wrong impression.

ILLUSTRATION:
ALBERT G RODRIGUEZ

Be Zen

Of course, one of the most important things when making a good first impression is presence. Presence is being there in the moment, attentive to what is going on, and sensitive to the needs and moods of the people around you. It is also a condition of openness, wherein you show that you are an empty cup, a vessel enthusiastic to be filled with new learning.

A huge part of this, of course is learning to listen. Listening, of course, cannot be faked. The Chinese ideogram from listening alludes to an ear, and a heart. Subordinate to the ear is the self. This shows us that we should try to understand the frame of mind of the other person as the other person, and not reduce it to our vision.

"There's life outside schoolwork. Aca-

Sign up for classes with the best professors. Learn Mandarin. Basically make the most out of it; you only get one shot.

One thing I wish I knew back then? That the world is not limited to your org, or your current circle of friends, or Manila, or the Philippines. Widen your view. If you don't think your course is for you, shift. You'll be happier doing what you love doing in the end."—Paul, 29, jewelry designer

"There are many things that I wish I knew, or did in school. But all the regrettable things in it—from unqualified or lazy teachers to crappy classmates, from heartbreak to peer pressure—all contributed in some way, in varying degrees, to who I am now. But I can share this: Students should know how to properly enjoy their lives apart from school. I've seen people take their studies too seriously and collapse under the pressure of school work. "Persevere. School work, like life, is not all smooth-sailing. There will be discouragements encountered along the way. Focus on your goal and never give up... I wish I knew that I could slack off and not take things too seriously. In any case, I knew that school would prepare me to reach my goal in life. I also knew that I would also learn a lot of things outside of school."—Ruby Gan, entrepreneur

"I wish I knew how to pass Physics. But it's not all about the grades. Enjoy school and learn more about yourself. Get ready for life."—Aye, 25, senior operations manager

"It's been eight years since I graduated and the one thing I wish I knew then is how much fun school really is compared to the reality that is life. After working for almost a decade and even throughout college, I find myself longing to go back to school to take up all the things that interest me. I urge those who are still in school to enjoy and make the most of every moment. Take in every experience and explore your every interest because it will

"I wish I knew that I had the luxury of time to explore, try different things and make as many friends. Study hard but have as much fun. Make as many friends. Be open-minded, explore, try different things."—Laine Santana, HSBC vice president of public affairs

"To those in grade school—don't take PE and other outdoor activities for granted, you'll miss them more and more as time passes. To those in high school—remember your Physics, it may seem useless to many but many things can be explained later on with simple physics. For those in college—a diploma does matter, don't overlook its clout with the people that make the decisions. Also, don't take your teachers for granted, they have a lot of knowledge that they are willing to share with you though they don't really need to. They are your confidant, your connections and your friends."—Jose Guerrero, 23, DJ at Monster Radio RX93.1

"Balance is key. Study hard, strive to do well especially in your majors, but always, always make time for friends, family, and your own personal interests. Sometimes, the lessons you learn outside the classroom are just as important as those you learn inside. I wish I knew that I could actually make a decent career out of writing (and shopping).

"I didn't know in school that I would forget every single formula and theory I was taught. What I do remember are the values I saw and emulated, the friends I made, and the teachers who went beyond the call of duty to inspire me. The skills I'm still using now are my ability to communicate and convince, my skill in working with and assembling groups and, most importantly, my discipline to persevere when the going gets tough. My tip is to treat all people well always, because you never know who among your classmates will succeed. If you were mean, trust that they will remember it. And if you were kind, they'll return the favor."—Lex Ledesma, entrepreneur and entrepreneurship educator

UDENT

Give yourself a mini-massage; gently but firmly rub your facial, neck and shoulder muscles in a circular motion while breathing deeply. Even your normal everyday routine such as drinking warm milk helps. Milk contains certain enzymes that will make you feel drowsy.

• Don't self-medicate. After burning the midnight oil for months, some students find themselves unable to sleep properly during weekends or holidays, so they turn to over-the-counter medication to help them sleep. However, self-medication is dangerous and can often lead to nasty habits. If your sleeping problem persists, see a doctor about it.

Road safety

For drivers:

- First and most important to keep in mind when driving, is that we are also responsible of our passengers, other motorists and the pedestrians.

- Buckle up. It's the first thing to do once inside the vehicle, even for short-distance trips.

- Always practice road courtesy and discipline by following traffic signs, obeying traffic rules, using signal lights properly and observing speed limits.

- Take caution at intersections, a danger zone. Intersections can be risky because there are a lot of distractions like turning cars, pedestrians and red-light runners.

- Keep your eyes on the road and your hands on the steering wheel. Using a cell phone or reading a map will distract you and lead to an accident.

- Drive defensively. There may be erratic drivers around you. Let a tailgater pass you.

- Never drink and drive. Drunk driving has caused countless road accidents.

- Don't drive sleep-deprived. Sleep is not a matter of willpower, but a biological need. If you become drowsy, pull off the road and get some rest.

- Know and understand the safety features of your vehicle. Read the manual, it explains how the safety features function.

- Always leave extra space between your car and the car in front of you, especially when the road is wet. During a stormy weather it maybe best not to drive and to just stay in doors.

- Do not let peer pressure influence safe driving habits.

Laugh along

Laugh at the teacher's jokes. Laughing shows a connection with her, it is often difficult to force or contrive. It is also a good tip to sit in front or in the teacher's line of view. In choosing where to sit, associate yourself with the right kind of people as well (the ones who can actually have something to offer and teach you, and the ones you don't mind being likened to), but show how you are also willing to help classmates in need, too.

Help sincerely

Another way you can show that you are present and aware inside the classroom, is by showing sincere concern. Try to be helpful when your teacher needs aid with the technical stuff. Offer to clean the blackboard, smile often and show you are listening with a receptive posture. This memory will certainly be evoked when your teacher is deciding whether to pass or fail you, or whether to give you that excellent grade or just the next best thing. Being helpful, however, only works if you are sincere about it.

Get real

This is also good advice for when your teacher asks you to do a paper that introduces yourself, or serves as a diagnostic paper. In an effort to show you are intelligent, do not present yourself as a pompous know-it-all. Do not brag about all your previous accomplishments, which prestigious high school you were from and what you are capable of. Be original. Find a way of bringing up your achievements without seeming arrogant about it. Show other's positive feedback of you. Be honest with your flaws and quirks, as well as your misgivings about the course. Phrase it with tact and always end with your willingness to do better and see these things as opportunities for growth. Show how your humility goes a long way.

I am A-worthy

When your teacher asks what your expectations are for the course, do not hesitate to admit that you want an A for it, if what is really what you desire. As a teacher, I actually come to the class believing that every student deserves an A until proven otherwise. More often than not, this will alert your teacher to how to guide you to your desired goal.

Work with the goal in mind. Picture yourself at the end of the course, having achieved an excellent job for the task given, and an excellent grade to go with it. Ask yourself what it takes to fulfill that goal and work backwards from there, setting your own goals and standards.

Practice gratitude

Teaching is reminding people they know just as well, and teachers appreciate self-motivated students, as their drive and their ambition is palpable, not to mention contagious. This doesn't mean one should be too grade-conscious and nitpicky. Show that you are in it for the real learning, and not because you are collecting points for your resumé. Show that you are on your own path to self-awareness and awareness of the greater world around you, and that you are grateful to people sent as your guides.

Campus retouch

I HAVE MANY REGRETS FROM MY SCHOOL days: having crammed too much, not having bonded with people, not building friendships with professors... the list goes on.

The worst thing about strolling down this particular street on memory lane is remembering how harassed I looked. If there was one thing I didn't have in my heaving school bag, it was a kikay kit!

Let me list down the real essentials you will need to breeze through your schooldays beautifully.

Pressed powder. Pick a compact powder with a light consistency but which gives enough coverage to disguise minor blemishes and undereye circles. One that does the job is Neutrogena Fine Fairness Face Powder. It absorbs shine and goes on even, and is packed with skin-friendly Vitamin C and SPF 15.

Blush. Choose a liquid, gel or cream formula in peach or pink tones. These also have the longest staying power, taking you from your first class to dismissal time without fussy touch-ups. I found a reasonably priced alternative to more expensive blushes in In-2-It

Lora Gabol

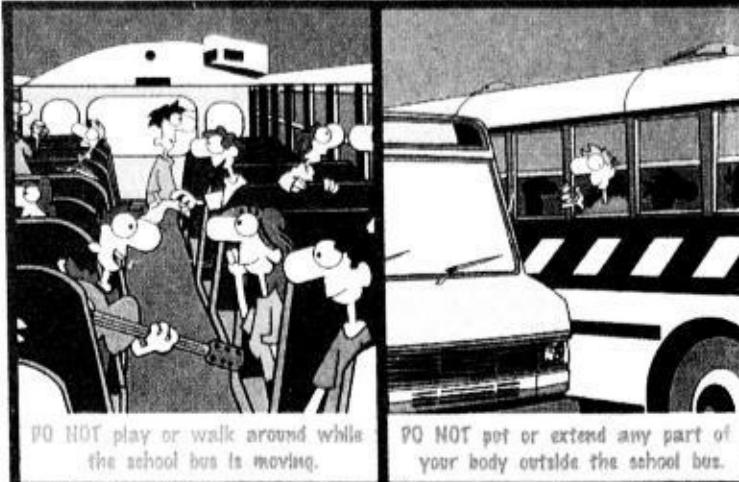

Gel Blush. It lends a rosy pink flush to cheeks, is non-sticky, and doesn't cause or aggravate blemishes.

Lip Balm. Tote a pot of Lip Balm for a few discreet swipes through the day. I keep one Ballmania Lip Balm (in trippy basketball packaging!) and Godiva Lightening Lip Gloss. The former is just the sweetest-tasting lip product in the market today, and the latter really lives up to its promise to keep lips soft, smooth and rosy.

Lash curler, mascara, eye drops. These three will give you a bright-eyed look: prep your eyes with eye drops like Visine Refresh to get rid of any redness, and to relieve eye-strain, too. Curl your lashes, then apply a coat of lash tint like Pour Wet Lash Mascara. This fresh new mascara formulation doesn't run or clump, so there's no need to worry about smudges even in the middle of the most hectic school day.

Hair product. Even when there's no time to whip up a blow dryer and hair iron, you can prep your locks with the right styling product. The easiest hair fixer-upper is a stick wax. It works on curly, straight, fine, coarse and unmanageable hair types. Bench Fix Stick Up wax is a good, inexpensive pick. For longer hair that's relatively easy to style, choose a light shine spray or serum that will keep flyaways at bay while boosting shine. L'oreal Professional Lumioil has three formulations. Just find the consistency that's best for your hair type.

Road safety is your responsibility

By the Ford Road Safety Youth Council

EVERY 18 SECONDS SOMEONE is involved in an auto accident; every 11 minutes someone dies. Scary as it may be, it has to be said. It's our job to inform our peers of the importance of road safety.

As members of the Ford Road Safety Youth Council, we make it a point to "use peer pressure in a positive way." We try to tell our fellow students, family and neighbors that road safety is very important and that it is very dangerous to be reckless.

When you're on the road, you have to take into consideration that it's not just your life you're dealing with, but the lives of your family, and the lives of somebody else's family. Road safety isn't just for drivers; it's for passengers and pedestrians.

Here are some street-smart strategies every driver and pedestrian, especially students, should keep in mind.

For pedestrians:

- Use overpasses and pedestrian lanes when crossing the street. Taking the effort to use them will save you from grief.

- Walk on the sidewalk at all times, keeping in mind that the road is for vehicles, not for people.

- Be mindful of the vehicles coming your way.

- Trivial as it may sound, "Stop, Look and Listen" works.

For commuters:

- Get on and off the bus or jeepneys only at full stop and at designated stops.

- Avoid making unnecessary movements and noise that can distract the driver.

- Do not extend any part of your body outside the vehicle.

For passengers:

- Wear your seatbelt at all times, including those seated at the back. Airbags are only supplemental to seatbelts.

- Never overload the vehicle. The number of seatbelts in the vehicle should determine the number of passengers.

COMPOSED OF 15 CORE STUDENTS from the Ateneo de Manila University, De La Salle University, UP Diliman, UP Los Baños, Asia Pacific College, Philippine School of Business Administration, and Thames, The Ford Road Safety Youth Council is Ford Group Philippines' answer to the growth of the number of road accidents involving young drivers because of alcohol and aggressiveness.

"We would like to reach out to more young people, who are considered as today's and the future's drivers. Ford believes that the best way to communicate with them is through programs that they can easily identify with and are initiated by their peers. We laud the members of the Ford Road Safety Youth Council for taking on the challenging task of being role models and practitioners of road safety," said Henry Co, president of Ford Group Philippines.
